Censors Don't Help Church Official Discusses Why Effort Was Made to Get Views of Public

Censorship is not the solution to the various problems that beset the industry, according to the conclusions reached in the second report of Dean Charles N. Lathrop, of the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches.

Dean Lathrop states that pendulum of public opinion has swung away from political censorship, as its unmerited favor became apparent. In the second report, he makes the interesting statement that some time to an effort was made to enlist the aid of a number of people who were in touch with public sentiment through various citizen agencies to create an atmosphere of understanding against the producers and offer constructive criticism while the scenes were being shot.

Senator Scorchingly Denounces Films—Calls Stars "Bar-tenders" and Hollywood a Vice Center

Washington—Senator Myers of Montana who periodically breaks out in an attack on everything connected with motion pictures, has made a new one that is a "scorcher.

The Senator this time makes such unpleasant comparisons as calling stars former "bar-tenders," "butcher boys" and "variety actors and actresses who may have earned $10 or $20 a week.

The Senator also attaches to the name of Hollywood such apppellations as "a colony of these people, where debauchery, drunkenness, ribaldry, dissipation, free love seem to be conspicuous.

At least, Senator Myers recognizes some good in motion pictures since he says "moving pictures, their educational influence for good, their growing importance as a factor in our civilization,... constitute a subject of acknowledged importance to the American people."

The Senator from Montana talks of censorship and Mr. Hays, and compares the moratorium with the saloon only the saloon is given the advantage because Mr. Myers thinks the motion picture of doing vastly more harm than the open bar (Continued on Page 4)

actually being shot. The report says that the scenes were so objectionable that the censors, who had previously seen and approved them, were definitely against being involved in the production. A complaint was made to the studio about the matter.

The censors said that they would try to work with the studio to try to improve the scenes, but that they could not guarantee that they would be acceptable to the public or the studio.

The case is still under review and the studio is working on a new script that is expected to be approved by the censors. The studio is also working on a new set of rules that will be used to guide future productions.
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Washington, Pa.—“Molly O” sang from the gilded bars of her cage in the lobby of the Capitol, illustrating the theme of the picture—that of a working girl confined to miserable surroundings as her birth inheritance when her talent and culture could have gained her admittance to the best society. A warbling canary gave the cue and the signs announcing the bird as the winged prototype of “Molly O” of the picture aroused the human interest response in the hearts of prospective patrons. Above, below, and on all sides of the bird were the cards: “Molly O will steal your heart away” and the singer’s notes exemplified the phrase.

Albany, N. Y.—How to exploit without an appropriation was answered for Manager Hill of the Strand during the run of “Smilin’ Through.” The manager was keen for advertising his show but had no money to spend. The First National exploitation man co-operated in paving the way. The Chamber of Commerce was giving a banquet at which the guests and speakers included Gov. Miller, the Mayor of Albany and Congressman Daniel A. Reed. Through the Knickerbocker Press ten pairs of tickets were offered to “Smilin’ Through” for the best slogans for the campaign to include the phrases: “Albany,” “Chamber of Commerce” and “Smilin’ Through” and the campaign was supplemented by eight excellent window displays and a double truck in the Times Union.

St. Louis, Mo.—Mike Vogel, local Paramount exploiter, is helping exhibitors in this district to keep their business up during the hot weather and has written an essay which has been sent to the theater men. Discussing the sub-conscious effects of differently-colored lights, he emphasizes that blue and green illuminations will suggest coolness while orange and red bulbs automatically cause one to think of heat, and advises the curtailing of the latter as well as use of white paint in the lobby.

A comparatively small sum will be enough to provide lemonade and he urges that this be served in the lobby, without charge. This can be played up in the advertising and will create favorable comment. Fans are a profitable investment according to Vogel, who insists that employees be instructed not to express the opinion that it is warm. “Have them say, ‘Isn’t it cool in here.’” Squeezing the idea that a theater is warm will mean a big difference in the receipts. Merely advertising that it is cool is not enough. Get them to feel it without directly saying it to them.

Myers Rants Again

Saloon ever did. In fact, Mr. Myers covers a rather extensive variety of subjects. His remarks in part will be found below:

The rugged real of the owners to improve the incidents of the act, have been their fear of censorship and loss of receipts.

Subject an Important One

"Moving pictures, their educational influence and their good or bad, it would be a mistake to consider them as a factor in our civilization, the number of those controlling the industry boldly to enter politics, and the desire of regulation of the law to make censorship a subject of acknowledged importance to the American public."

"Those who control the industry seem to have been of the opinion that the sensational, the sordid, the present, the phases of fast life, the ways of extravagance, the risk, the passion, the pride, and the public censure and the money, and apparently they have been out to coin, no matter what the effect upon the public, young or old, and when official censorship has been advocated the owners have resisted it."

"The industry has gone so far in defying public sentiment and has been so flagrant in many of its activities that official sentiment for censorship has been aroused while it is not too late. It may be temporaril

CHARACTER OF STORY......Thief assumes role of minister and is reformed through his own impersonation

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...........6,069 feet

Peter B. Kyne’s Saturday Evening Post story “The Parson of Panamint,” serves as the basis of the vehicle in which Jack Holt makes his first single stellar appearance. He has previously been co-starred but in “While Satan Sleeps,” the title given the adaptation of Albert S. LeVino, Holt is the one and only star. He has long deserved a part such as he has in this, one which gives him every opportunity to prove his capability and he certainly succeeds. Holt has an interesting personality and a manner that seems to make whatever he does thoroughly convincing. The role of the minister’s son who becomes a thief and later is reformed by his own impersonation of a clergyman, affords the star particularly desirable opportunities which permit him to win over his audience from the start.

“While Satan Sleeps” offers a worth while entertainment and judging from the manner in which it was received at the Rivoli, it will satisfy. From the way they applauded at the close it would appear that it pleased them all and it is not unlikely that it will prove equally entertaining in all theaters because it contains real audience appeal. The story blends pathos with humor in a particularly effective and true-to-life fashion that readily grasps the spectator’s attention and holds it all the way through. It is interesting from start to finish.

Director Henabery has given the story a very careful and satisfying production. There are times when he might have overstepped the bounds both in the comedy and dramatic sequences but nothing is exaggerated and even where there might be a tendency on the part of the spectator not to take things seriously, careful direction makes it sincere and convincing. This is especially so in connection with the conversion of the thief and the scenes between the impostor-minister and the dying dance hall girl. They’ll laugh at the comedy and choke a little in the dramatic scenes.

The star is surrounded by a thoroughly capable and well suited cast. Wade Boteler is a fine type for his pal, “Red” Barton; Fritzi Brunette is the girl who waits for him to settle his account in jail and Betty Francisco is the daughter of the leading churchman in Panamint. Others are Mabel Van Buren, J. P. Lockney, Bobbie Mack and Herbert Standing.

Story: The people of Panamint eventually learn from his own lips that their minister is an impostor, a thief. His reformation is brought about through the death of a dance hall girl. He is joined by his father, a clergyman; he serves an unfinished jail sentence and is rewarded by the girl who waits for him.

Good Combination of Appeal That Makes It Pleasing to Majority

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It looks like you can not only please your patrons with “While Satan Sleeps” but also please your box office. It has both audience and box office appeal and you couldn’t ask for a better combination. You can’t judge every individual’s taste but to the majority, Jack Holt, in his first single starring production, promises to be completely satisfying.

If you know your folks favor stories in which humor and pathos is mixed you can feel doubly certain of pleasing them. Be sure to mention the author’s name and the fact that the story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post as “The Parson of Panamint.” The star has a following and you can count on gaining more admirers for him with “While Satan Sleeps.” Catchlines will give you an idea of the story and the usual exploitation methods will get them in.

Character of Story...... Poor girl plans rich marriage anticipating a divorce and substantial alimony but falls in love with husband whom she nearly loses because of her previous plans

Ethel Watts Mumford’s story is the best and strongest vehicle Corinne Griffith has had in some time. It not only provides a broader role for the star but contains a genuinely fine audience appeal. “Divorce Coupons” offers a new and interesting angle on the unhappy marriage problem that adds to its value as entertainment and lifts it out of the hackneyed rut of pictures of this type. “Divorce Coupons” is capable of claiming distinctiveness and is certainly an appropriate story for Corinne Griffith.

Director Webster Campbell has provided a very worth while production and in the early sequences there is a delightfully realistic Southern atmosphere. Very beautiful locations are found in the picture and excellent photography is another good point. In the exterior shots particularly, well judged camera work makes the views all the more pleasing.

The director handles the story very carefully and with the exception of spending just a little too much footage in the climax, his work is better than the average. The interest is splendidly sustained throughout and the method of development is such that you cannot complain of it being at all obvious. There is no anticipation of the ending in “Divorce Coupons.” The murder mystery episode is skilfully handled and a good suspense established.

Corinne Griffith, first as the daughter of a poor but aristocratic Southern family, and later as the wife of the millionaire, is the outstanding attraction of the film. She makes the most of the varied opportunities presented and in the emotional moments uses a proper restraint. She is always gorgeously gowned. Holmes E. Herbert and Mona Lisa do very well in the roles of next importance. The cast, on the whole, is a good one.

Story: Linda Catherton marries the rich and notorious Roland Bland fully convinced that she will divorce him but she finds herself in love with Bland who is devoted to her. Con, a former Pal of Bland’s, finds that Bland is so much in love with his wife that he cannot rule him any longer. His plan to separate the couple ends in his own death at the hands of a woman who loves Bland but is near death. She kills Con to save Bland’s happiness.

You Can Make Promises and It Should Be Worth While Getting Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The above synopsis is a very meagre outline of the story of “Divorce Coupons.” It contains many more complications and interesting twists, particularly in connection with the woman, Ishtar Lane, the psychic, a character which adds a touch of mystery and suspense to the story. The production offers a very suitable entertainment and you can make promises for it and tell them it is the best story the star has had lately.

You might use catchlines referring to the girl who married to obtain a divorce and alimony but found herself in love with her husband. They will do for an idea of the story, but it is so much more interesting than you can suggest in lines, that it might be better to keep them guessing. Work to get them in because they should be well satisfied. Give the star good prominence and display plenty of stills. Tell them about her beautiful gown.
Betty Blythe in "How Women Love"

Betty Blythe fresh from her triumphs in "The Queen of Sheba," "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband." The most beautiful dramatic artist on the American screen.

Story founded on "The Dangerous Inheritance" by Izola Forrester, published as a novel by Houghton-Mifflin, now being syndicated in leading newspapers throughout the country. An elaborate society melodrama of metropolitan life against a background of wealth and operatic Bohemia.

Supporting Miss Blythe are the following players: Gladys Hulette, Robert Frazer, Charles Lane, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry Sothorn, Henry Sedley, Katherine Stewart, Templar Saxe and Signor Salerno. These names must carry weight with all genuine "fans" and experienced exhibitors.

Kenneth Webb, who has been with the Whitman Bennett Studios almost continually since leaving Famous Players. He directed Miss Blythe in "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband."

By Dorothy Farnum, who wrote the scripts for "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband"—regular writer for the Whitman Bennett studios in conjunction with productions directed by Mr. Webb.

By Elsa Lopez formerly with Griffith and Famous Players—art director for "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband." The sets will be as elaborate as any ever constructed by the Whitman Bennett Studios for First National or United.

The atmosphere combines New York "high society" and "Bohemia." It is correct to the most minute detail. Two hundred extra and type artists are used in the "society opera" episode alone.

CAMERAMAN ..................... John J. Mescall

AS A WHOLE. Satisfying amusement at first but drifts into illogical dramatic business toward close.

DETAIL ......................... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY. Awkward and homely girl is transformed into graceful and attractive girl by woman whose sweetheart she falls in love with.

This is Rupert Hughes' first production in which he is both author and director. "The Wall Flower" is, on the whole, a satisfactory offering which contains a story at first amusing and gradually drifting into a more serious dramatic trend that really borders on tragedy. It is an unusual combination but the development is logical enough even when incidents themselves are not. It is a more or less Cinderella theme with a slightly new angle.

The first few reels of the picture contains some amusing situations that will register as good entertainment with a big enough majority unless they happen to be the kind that demands strictly consistent incidents and object to anything far-fetched. The happenings in the life of "The Wall Flower" (Colleen Moore) are a trifle strained. It isn't plausible that a girl of her station should seek a place at a college prom and she certainly would never attempt to get by with the get-up which she wears. Natural intuition would tell her she'd be laughed out of the place. However, the idea carries a suitable comic angle which the author has taken advantage of to provide amusement and for those who will accept it as such, it fills the purpose.

The result of Hughes' first directorial effort is a picture of average satisfaction. It might have been more than this but the latter reels are not nearly as good as the first and he apparently was at a loss as to how he should end it. The conclusion looks like an afterthought. The logical ending would follow the girl's sacrifice when she gives up the man she loves because the woman who proved to be her fairy godmother is also in love with him. But an anti-climactic trailer brings about the happy ending in a fairly awkward fashion. The sub-titles throughout are good.

Story: Phin Larrabee plays a joke on his pal, Roy Duncan, and gives him the name of Idalene Noblin as the pretty girl Roy danced with at a prom. Roy invites Idalene to the next dance but finds Idalene is a homely, awkward "Wall Flower." When they laugh and joke about her Idalene goes out and runs in front of an auto. The occupant, rich Pamela Shiel, takes Idalene to her home and cares for her. She transforms her into an attractive young girl and after complications are set aside Idalene marries Breen, formerlly Pamela's lover.

Should Please the Average Audience. Exploit the Title

For the average audience, "The Wall Flower" should prove a thoroughly satisfying feature. They won't likely pick it apart for logic, reason, etc. but will accept it for the laughs it contains and a more or less effective heart interest which it creates for its heroine, Colleen Moore, in the role of "The Wall Flower." is capable of getting their sympathy and toward the close she fulfills the motto of "clothes make the woman" without a doubt.

Most any type of Cinderella story fills the bill with the average crowd. Use the author's name and tell them he wrote and directed this one. Appeal to your local high school boys and girls by telling them about the girl who went to the prom and was laughed at. Your own exploitation along these lines should get them interested. You can promise them they'll like Colleen Moore in "The Wall Flower." Play up the title.
Good Acting and Careful Direction Put It Over

Florence Vidor in
"THE REAL ADVENTURE"
Associated Exhibitors—Pathe

DIRECTOR ......................... King Vidor
AUTHOR .......................... Henry Kitchell Webster
SCENARIO BY ..................... Mildred Considine
CAMERAMAN ...................... George Barnes

As a whole, careful and intelligent handling of familiar theme makes interesting and satisfactory entertainment

STORY . . . A new angle on the neglected wife story; proves its point conclusively and maintains good interest

DIRECTION . . . Good; tells story in straightforward fashion and particularly good in that he wastes no footage on unnecessary detail

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Satisfactory
LIGHTINGS ...................... Generally all right
STAR . . . Appealing, very pretty, and possesses a good deal of charm. Plays the part with sincerity

EXTERIORS ....... Pretty snow shots in beginning
INTERIORS ....................... Suitable

DETAIL ......................... Correct

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Wife whose husband refuses to take her into business confidences leaves him until she makes good at a career, wins his respect and his love

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . . . About 5,000 feet

King Vidor has taken a fairly familiar theme for Miss Vidor’s latest starring vehicle, but by skillful handling and deft touches he makes "The Real Adventure" a satisfying entertainment that will go over well in most houses. He uses the material at hand intelligently and always to the best advantage, proving the point of the story conclusively and to the spectator’s satisfaction.

One of the best features of Vidor’s direction is his entire omission of unessential detail. At no time does he waste footage on incidents that have but a vague connection with the story. This is obvious throughout the picture and there are times when he might readily have gone into detail, such as in the beginning, when his hero and heroine meet. There are no protracted situations, no long scenes showing the courtship, the wedding, etc., just brief shots including the meeting, love at first sight, and the honeymoon. He gets right into his story without a waste of time. The story deals with the familiar neglected wife.

However, Henry Kitchell Webster has conceived a new angle to the situation that is brought out effectively in Vidor’s production. In this case it is not neglect brought about through the husband’s lack of affection for his wife, but the want of a better understanding between them. He holds his wife in the light of a toy and treats her as such while she begs to be taken into his confidences, to share his brain. This is an unusual twist.

Production values are up to the standard. Settings are in keeping with the story and the snow shots in the opening reel are especially attractive. The subtitles might have been a little better.

Florence Vidor, both as the wife and later as the costume designer, is appealing and possesses a charm that will reach her audience. She plays with a sincerity that makes the part real. Clyde Fillmore is not the most attractive of leading men but his work is satisfactory. Others are Nellie P. Saunders, Liliyan McCarthy and Philip Ryder.

Story: Rodney Aldrich, a brilliant lawyer, prefers to “baby” his wife rather than have her share his business worries and triumphs. Rose is unhappy and determines to prove to him that she, too, has brains. She leaves him and joins a theatrical company as chorus girl, from which she graduates into costume designer. She becomes famous for her work as a designer and is just about to sign a contract with Ziegfeld when Rodney comes for her, admits his mistake and takes her home.

Promise a Pleasing Star and a New Angle on Familiar Theme

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The general run of picture patrons should find “The Real Adventure” an agreeable entertainment. Regardless of whether the story holds a particular appeal for them or not, they will hardly kick because their attention is held and they will like Florence Vidor. Her performance is sincere and she will be favorably received by practically everyone. She is beautiful and has a very pleasing personality.

You can promise a new angle on the marital problem and a good production. Use the director’s name and recall any of his previous productions you may have shown such as “Woman Wake Up,” with Florence Vidor, a recent release, and last year, “The Sky Pilot.” A good selection of stills in the lobby will attract your patrons and catchlines with the title should serve to bring them in.
Russell Has Good Role in Latest Release

William Russell in “A SELF MADE MAN”
Fox

DIRECTOR ................ Rowland V. Lee
AUTHOR ................. Geo. Horace Lorimer
SCENARIO BY ............ Monte M. Katterjohn
CAMERAMAN .............. David Able

AS A WHOLE... Starts off as weak comedy; works up to live, actionful feature that will appeal to lovers of hero tales

STORY........ Not startlingly original but serves as good vehicle for star and will satisfy his admirers

DIRECTION..... Fair at first though very good in working up to exciting climax

PHOTOGRAPHY ............. Average
LIGHTINGS ........................ All right

STAR...... Has plenty of good opportunities in this and makes good use of them

SUPPORT..... Adequate; includes Renee Adoree, James Gordon, Richard Tucker and Harry Gibbon

EXTERIORS ........................ Few
INTERIORS ........................ Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Wall St. man disowns son not inclined to work, goes away and returns to find his son has saved his business from ruin

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,920 feet

William Russell has about the strongest hero role that he has had in some time in “A Self-Made Man,” his latest Fox release. The story is based on one by George Horace Lorimer which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It offers Russell a thoroughly appropriate role with a good variety of opportunities which he makes good use of. The prize fight sequence will offer a first rate thrill for the men and there is sufficient action in the film to make it a satisfying number for any average crowd.

At the outset the picture doesn’t promise very much because the comedy business is made up of silly situations in which the star is a pleasure loving son of a rich Wall St. man. A trained bear in the hero’s apartment is the only instrument of amusement, and the animal’s owner hiding under a bear rug is supposed to be another mirth provoker. But once this sequence is closed, the picture becomes interesting and more a comedy-drama than a straight comedy.

The director has gotten in enough action to keep it moving and builds successfully toward the climax. He does not keep the denouement entirely concealed, but this is due partly to the fact that a title gives it away. You are presented with the facts: two brokers, each with a son; the first man’s son is in partnership with his father and working for the business, while the second man’s son prefers pleasure before business. Since the second man’s son is the star of the picture and recognized hero of the story, you know he’s bound to turn out all right, especially after the first man says “this is the kind of a son I have.” The spectator knows he’s bragging too early in the picture.

However, the fight between the two sons for control of a certain stock, in the absence of their respective parents, provides good excitement and a picture that will satisfy Russell’s admirers particularly. Renee Adoree is hero’s sweetheart who lends him the money to put over the deal.

Story: Because of a misunderstanding Anita Gray breaks her engagement to Jack Spurlock and following that Jack’s father disowns him. Jack is working as a society reporter and attends a dance given by Anita. He overhears a conversation in which Hugo Bonsall, son of one of his father’s competitors, is planning to ruin the elder Spurlock. Jack decides to fight and with Anita’s financial help, he saves the business and wins back the girl’s love.

Average Crowd and Star’s Following Will Be Suited

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you cater to an average audience and one that is not hard to please you can satisfy them with “A Self-Made Man.” Where Russell has a following, it will go very well and you can appeal particularly to his admirers. It should be easy to get the men in by telling them about the fight sequence and using stills in the lobby that will let them know the picture contains something that will appeal to them particularly.

Say that in “A Self-Made Man” Russell plays the part of the son of a Wall St. man who was disowned because he preferred pleasure to his father’s business but later saved his father’s company from ruin. You can make promises for the stock market fight and give the title good prominence. It is a good one and can be effectively exploited.
Doris May’s Latest is Farce Comedy of Fairly Amusing Quality

Doris May in
"THE UNDERSTUDY"
R-C Pictures

DIRECTOR .................. William A. Seiter
AUTHOR ...................... Ethel M. Hadden
SCENARIO BY ............. Beatrice Van
CAMERAMAN ................. Joseph Dubray
AS A WHOLE...... Fairly amusing farce comedy that is a bit silly at first but settles down to better things after first reel or so.

STORY........... Contains some originality and offers satisfying entertainment though pretty far-fetched

DIRECTION ...... Of average quality; provides fair production and holds the interest satisfactorily

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. All right

LIGHTINGS .......................... Good

STAR....... Well suited and does good work; over-acts a little in opening reel

SUPPORT....... Wallace MacDonald good in hero role; Arthur Hoyt a poor comedian; others
Christine Mayo and Otis Harlan

EXTERIORS ........................... Suitable

INTERIORS .......................... Adequate sets

DETAIL .............................. Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY....... Understudy impersonates actress in a matter concerning a rich young man and an objecting parent; she wins both

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......... 4,557 feet

Doris May’s latest picture is an improvement over her recent releases but her story material is still a bit weak. “The Understudy” is better than either “Boy Crazy” or “Gay and Devilish.” Her last two features, but it is not strong enough to make more than an average entertainment. The business in the early reels is inclined to be of a silly nature and resorts to such worn-out slap-stick as the heroine sitting on a hat pin and dancing awkwardly, finally whirling in dizzy fashion and landing in a heap on the floor. This might get laughs in a two-reel slap-stick comedy in which you expect it, but it hardly amuses in a farce comedy.

After the first reel or so Director Seiter gets away from the frivolous stuff and settles down to a better and more substantial kind of comedy that offers some fairly original situations and amusing complications.
The idea of the rich father taking a chorus girl into his home to reform her so that his son can marry her, is pretty far-fetched but it provides suitable enough screen material, gets over some laughs and at the same time includes an interesting romance. Its ending is more or less obvious but it isn’t so much the fault of the direction. The spectator just naturally anticipates such a conclusion.

It would seem that a little more fun might have been gotten out of the honeymoon sequence and it promises to be much more amusing than it is. However, it concludes by finding a suitor for the rejected star who has been impersonated by her understudy.

Doris May is suited to the role of the understudy and does good work for the most part. She overacts occasionally in being too vivacious. Wallace Mac-Donald makes a satisfactory hero while Otis Harlan is the unusual father. Christine Mayo is the actress who loses out in the race for hero’s affections. Arthur Hoyt seldom succeeds as a comedian.

Story: Grace Lorimer promises to have nothing further to do with Tom Manning and sends her understudy, Mary Neil, to collect a check from Tom’s father for agreeing to see his son no more. Instead of hand-ning over the check, Manning takes a fancy to Mary who presents herself as Grace Lorimer, makes her remain in his home with promises of a new life. Sometime later Manning wires his son to return. Complications follow but eventually Mary and Tom are happy while Grace satisfies herself with Cathbert Vane, a former suitor of Mary’s.

Will Satisfy Star’s Admirers and Others Not Too Critical

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If they are not too critical and not too hard to amuse you may satisfy them with “The Understudy” but if they demand strong and original situations to please them in the way of farce comedies, very likely the picture won’t make a very favorable impression. Regardless of the fairly weak material, the interest is satisfactorily sustained and they can’t kick about not having their attention held.

Where the star has a following you will stand a better chance of putting it over because it is better than her last two productions and the title is one that can be used effectively with catchlines and can stand exploiting. Posters and stills will decorate the lobby and attract attention. Wallace MacDonald is a well-known leading man and his name might also be used.
Fearlessly it throws the light of truth on the age-old problems of the woman who loves not wisely but too well.

Another Good Western With Enough Action and Pleasing Star

Hoot Gibson in “TRIMMED” Universal

DIRECTOR ................. Harry Pollard
AUTHOR ................. Hapsburg Liebe
SCENARIO BY .. A. F. Statter and Wallace Clifton
CAMERAMAN .............. Sol Polito
AS A WHOLE....... Will appeal to western fans and those who like action that affords plenty of excitement

STORY....... Offers star a good role and will please his admirers; of rather a familiar formula

DIRECTION....... Adequate; does pretty well to hold interest and get in action because story is fairly slight

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Good
LIGHTINGS .................. Natural
STAR...... Is kept on the jump in role of war-hero sheriff

SUPPORT....... Usual types of western bad men, Fred Kohler, Otto Hoffman and Dick Lareno a good trio; Patsy Ruth Miller hasn’t very much to do as leading lady

EXTERIORS ................. Good
INTERIORS ................. Few
DETAIL ................. Requisite
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Political gang elect war hero as sheriff thinking they can rule him but they are greatly disappointed

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........4,583 feet

The plot follows the usual western formula pretty closely including the hero, heroine and customary bad men plotting the hero’s downfall. Despite the familiarity and slight situations, the director has succeeded in keeping the action coming and holds the interest satisfactorially. A grain of comedy now and then affords some mild amusement between times. A few comic touches miss fire but on the whole they register all right. The welcome home reception staged for the war hero’s return will amuse them, particularly when hero gets off a station before his own and misses the welcome prepared for him. The leader of the band overacts in his effort to get laughs but a colored mammy and her kiddies are the real thing in this sequence. More laughs come from a trick mule.

A first rate thrill comes when hero crosses a high suspension bridge which the villain has tampered with, and is hurled into the canyon below. It would have been more satisfactory to the spectator if the director showed how hero made his miraculous escape from death in this bit. Gibson is kept busy from start to finish in “Trimmed” and his pleasing personality should be gaining more admirers for him.

Story: Dale Garland, Centerville’s war hero, gets a big reception upon his return from France. Nebo Slayter, political boss of the country, and his henchmen, run him for sheriff against John Millard, the incumbent, whom they can’t “handle.” Millard’s daughter, Garland’s childhood sweetheart, returns from boarding school soon after her father’s defeat. Garland learns from her of Slayter’s dishonest schemes.
Slayter’s ring quarrels with a moonshiner to whom they had been furnishing “protection,” and Young, Slayter’s tool, kills him. The girl sees the murder, tells Dale who starts after the slayer and brings him in after a terrific fight. Meanwhile the deputies have arrested two of the slain man’s accomplices. They confess, implicating the whole ring and Garland jails them all. He wins the love of the girl.

A First Rate Number For Any Admirer of Western Pictures

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors catering to a western loving crowd can safely book “Trimmed” and satisfy their patrons. It doesn’t matter that it isn’t strikingly original as long as it contains plenty of action, some thrills and the sort of material that goes over with admirers of this particular style of entertainment. “Trimmed” will fill the bill.

If you showed Gibson’s last feature, “Step On It,” and they liked it, make promises for this one and tell them they’ll like it as well. Try and get them interested in the star. He has the right kind of personality for the stories he is given and he works hard to please his audience. Catchlines will tell the story and a trailer would be all you would need to bring them in for the feature.
In the city of the shams it attacks and exposes this powerfully-directed, all-star picture received amazingly fine reviews in the dailies and drew more business in the beautiful 600 seat Cameo Theatre than other more widely advertised shows drew into two nearby big competitive first run houses.

EVENING TELEGRAM: "False Fronts' will be found very entertaining. It permits one to leave the theatre in a very pleasant frame of mind—which is, after all, what we go to the theatre for."

MORNING TELEGRAPH: "False Fronts' is an entertaining, well acted and well directed film play. Edward Earle, who was recently crowned 'King of the Movies' plays the role of Keith Drummond with the charm and all the upstanding attributes of a football hero and only son of one of the F. F. V's."

NEW YORK TIMES: "When people have ideas which they independently seek to express in film form, they are likely to contribute something imaginative, or at least sincere, to the screen. 'False Fronts' was more simply and honestly done than most pictures of its kind."

NEW YORK HERALD: "There is a potent quality in this story of social hypocrisy. The course of the young Southerner is refreshingly different from the customary triumphs of bluff prosperity."

THE SUN: "'False Fronts' is a wholesale condemnation of making a big show of success, forcefully enacted by Edward Earle, Barbara Castleton and Frank Losee."
Foreign Mystery Novelty Combines Horrors With Comedy

"NINE SECONDS FROM HEAVEN"

Rialto Productions—State Rights

DIRECTOR ......................... Franklin Seitz
AUTHOR ............................. Franklin Seitz
SCENARIO BY ..................... Harry Chandlee Jessie
CAMERAMAN ......................... Not credited

AS A WHOLE...Production built along foreign standards filled with mystery interest and morbid horrors. Lacks the novelty of Caligari but is nevertheless entertaining

STORY......Slow in starting. Requires many titles to explain the action. Turned into a joke at the end

DIRECTION......Average. Could have done much better with the material

PHOTOGRAPHY ....................... Good

LIGHTINGS ......Too dark in many places

PLAYERS......Foreign cast. Do good acting but very obvious. Types will not appeal to average American

EXTERIORS ......................... Good

INTERIORS ......................... Good

DETAIL ......................... Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY...........Rich young man bored with life rescues girl and in the end discovers that it is all the joke of his friends

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,600 feet

"Nine Seconds from Heaven" is different from anything that has come across the water. It is built purely upon foreign standards and will appear much too morbid to many an audience. It contains reminiscences of "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" but is built upon a mystery that is clearly an invention and is so mixed with comedy that it is difficult to take the melodramatic situations very seriously. The great points in its favor is that it holds the attention in a remarkable way, is entertaining and different. The points against the picture would be its extreme morbidness, the very unattractive girls and young men in the leading roles and the fact that the hero fails to gain your confidence or sympathy.

Foreign Mystery Production and Something Different

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can safely promise them something different in "Nine Seconds from Heaven." It is very different from the average American picture and will satisfy many who will welcome a change. Advertise it as a European mystery production.

You might tell them something of the story, enough to get them curious; but do not give the solution away or tell anything of the ending. Use a trailer of the rescue scenes showing how the girl is saved from the power of the hypnotist. It might also be a good idea to show some of the comedy shots so they know that it is not all horrors. If your audience likes only the conventional type of picture and there is any doubt in your mind, then better see this one first, for you know your people best.

Some Short Reels

“Cops” — Buster Keaton — First National

Type of production .................. 2 reel comedy

Once more Buster Keaton rings the bell. His latest comedy “Cops” is just as funny as “The Boat” and will bring down the house with laughter. The comedy gags roll out one after another and lead to a side splitting climax in which Buster is classed all over the lot by about 300 cops. Never have so many cops been assembled before in a short subject and in no comedy have the devices used to evade capture been so ingenious.
And through all this Buster sails quickly and quietly; not once does his serious expression break and not once does he forestall a gag. As the reels unravel the laughs get closer together until at the finish it becomes all one long ripple. Such was the effect, when this comedy was shown to a Broadway audience on a hot, humid night.

Buster loves his girl but she refuses his advances and tells him to become a business man and earn a lot of money before she will marry him. He manages to find a purse with some money and also manages to prevent the owner from recovering his loss. With this money he sets out to conquer the world. In another part of town a family are about to move. Buster buys the furniture from a pretendor and gets a horse and wagon to move it. The people think he is the expressman and help him load up the wagon which he drives off. With the aid of an extension coat rack and a boxing glove Buster makes a signalling arm that not only stops traffic but knocks down the traffic cop. At one place Buster discovers that his old horse is not very responsive. He gets down and clasps a pair of earphones on the horse’s head; then returning to his seat, rings him up on the telephone and tells him to move on. The horse understands and moves on. And when the time the family are at their new house waiting for their furniture!

As luck would have it Buster sails his wagon of furniture into the main avenue where a police parade is taking place.
In the grand stand is Buster’s girl and her father who is mayor of the town. The wagon stops before the grand stand and Buster searches his pockets for a match to light his cigarette. Just then a tug throws a bomb from the roof of a building and it lands on Buster’s wagon. Buster uses the fuse to light his cigarette, then he throws the bomb to the cops.
This starts the grand claque in which about 300 cops run Buster tall through the town and then back again to where he started.
The furniture is wrecked by atoms by the outrash of the cops.
Many times he is surrounded or cornered but manages to slip out. And all this time the family wait on the steps of their new home for the furniture! In the end Buster runs into jail for safety. The cops pile in after him and when they are all in he slips out from under and locks them in. But his girl rejects him and he throws open the doors. The next flash shows a little tomb stone on which rests Buster’s hat—but even this, after he himself is dead, bangs at a saucy angle.
Buster Keaton is irresistible and you can make no mistake if you show him to your audience. His popularity has grown and is on the ascent. He is the chief attraction of many a program and threatens to remain so.

Pathe Review No. 163

Type of production .................. 1 reel magazine

The opening shots of this number of Pathe Review take you on a personally conducted tour to Maritzburg, South Africa.
The streets are lined with white men, negroes, dwarfs and children. The rickshaw men adorn themselves with gay masks and horns to prove they are equal to the beasts of burden.
A special scientific study in evolution appears in this number of the review under the title of “Where Did You Get Your Face.” Special drawings show the angle that the face makes with the bale of the brain. Skulls of primitive men and ancient animals show step by step, how man developed his forehead. This is followed by a little novelty showing a table and chairs in action.
The cards deal by themselves and the chips move automatically and a whole game of poker is played without the aid of humans.
In the arts and crafts section you see how the Navajo Indians make their rugs and a little nature chapter shows a mother bird feeding her young. The subject matter of this number of the review is quite varied and filled with interest. It is well up to the new high standard set for this series.

“The Gyro-Designer and Smoke-Rings” — Kineto Review

Type of production .................. 1 reel popular science

Here is another of Prof. P. F. Smith’s popular scientific reels.
This time a gyro-designer is constructed before the camera from the simplest of materials. A tin funnel is attached to a gyroscope top and filled with white sand. The other end of the top is suspended to a wooden rod which is free to swing.
The sand pours in a thin line through an opening in the funnel and when the top is spun elaborate designs are traced with the sand. The second series of experiments in this instructive reel deal with smoke rings. Rings of smoke are first made in the natural way by smoking tobacco and then they are made experimentally. A round hole is cut into a tin can and a sheet of rubber stretched across the opposite end. When the can is filled with smoke and the rubber bottom is struck, rings puff out of the opening. Various kinds of smoke is manufactured and an animated drawing shows the detailed anatomy of a smoke ring. The reel is instructive and will hold the attention of the average audience. It does not contain the appeal of the soap-bubble reel in the same series, but it is well up to the Prof. Smith’s standard.

Official Urban Movie Chats No. 22—Hodkinson

Type of production .................. 1 reel magazine

This number of the Official Chats leaves out the usual prelude, quoting some prominent man on prosperity and success, or telling your audience a two-by-four moral of “early to bed and early to rise.” It leaves out all this and begins with pictures. Nina Wilcox Putnam, the popular novelist, is shown in her country home. She takes a few moments to advise her fatt friends how to reduce by the use of a liberal diet. She tells you what to avoid and what to eat. Manila hemp is the subject of the industrial section. The machines that twist the hemp into ropes are illustrated. This section, however, would have been more complete if one or two shots were obtained showing the hemp as it grows. Some interesting shots of the cooper rooster on top of the beautiful skyscraper in New York are next shown. The bird is thirteen feet high and ten feet wide and is said to be the largest weather vase in the world.
Views from the top of the building fill a good portion of this review which ends with a series of shots of animals in the zoo.
There are but five subjects to this number of the review. The scientific and sport sections that were featured in the earlier numbers of this series are entirely missing from the last two or three. The omission of the sermon at the start of the reel will be welcomed by many.
"Crime in a Big City"—Aesop's Fables—Pathe
Type of production........................1 reel animated cartoon
"Those who lay traps for others often get caught by their own bait," is the moral of this number of Aesop's Fables. The story is told of how the old farmer goes to the city and his little dog follows him and saves him from the schemes of crooks and gamblers. In one scene the farmer meets a flapper who cleans out his pockets but the little dog saves his master's property by taking them back from the girl's flapping galoshes. In the gambling den the farmer plays poker with two oxes, who pass cards to each other under the table. The little dog however manages to get the cards and give them to his boss. When the gamblers hold five aces, then it is time to quit, and the farmer scoops up the coin and runs. They make a neat escape and return to the country. The animation is amusing and contains some very comical situations. It is well up to the average of the series and will please any audience.

Type production........................1 reel travel cartoon
The latest Hy Mayer Travelugh is one of the most amusing of the entire series so far. First of all there are some interesting shots of the Paris shops and shoppers showing the hurrying crowds and there is also a view of Paris's stock exchange. The artist, as usual, selects the more interesting types for his sketches which fade into the reality in a manner that always provides a laugh. Scenes of the markets and side-walk vendors furnish interesting material for sketches that are preceded by cleverly written sub-titles. One in particular was that which said the merchants gradually began to look like the things they sold. There follows a sketch which fades into a woman fish peddler and the comparison wasn't over-drawn either. The reel is entertaining and should make up a good part on any program.

When the Devil Drives

By and With LEAH BAIRD

"When lovely woman stoops to folly,
And finds at last that men betray—"

The drama of life is played when the break comes; when woman is desperate and "the devil drives."

There are two women. Different homes and friends, different modes of living and yet, in the stress of circumstance, they are alike.

"Don’t Doubt Your Wife" established Leah Baird’s popularity. "When The Devil Drives" makes it doubly assured.

It is written with a woman’s insight of what women like, and what men crave to see. Superbly produced by Arthur F. Beck and forcefully directed by Paul Scardon.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... 6,069 feet

Peter B. Kyne's Saturday Evening Post story "The Parson of Panamint," serves as the basis of the vehicle in which Jack Holt makes his first single stellar appearance. He has previously been co-starred but in "While Satan Sleeps," the title given the adaptation of Albert S. Le Vino, Holt is the one and only star. He has long deserved a part such as he has in this, one which gives him every opportunity to prove his capability and he certainly succeeds. Holt has an interesting personality and a manner that seems to make whatever he does thoroughly convincing. The role of the minister's son who becomes a thief and later is reformed by his own impersonation of a clergyman, affords the star particularly desirable opportunities which permit him to win over his audience from the start.

"While Satan Sleeps" offers a worth while entertainment and judging from the manner in which it was received at the Rivoli, it will satisfy. From the way they applauded at the close it would appear that it pleased them all and it is not unlikely that it will prove equally entertaining in all theaters because it contains real audience appeal. The story blends pathos with humor in a particularly effective and true-to-life fashion that readily grasps the spectator’s attention and holds it all the way through. It is interesting from start to finish.

Director Henabery has given the story a very careful and satisfying production. There are times when he might have overstepped the bounds both in the comedy and dramatic sequences but nothing is exaggerated and even where there might be a tendency on the part of the spectator not to take things seriously, careful direction makes it sincere and convincing. This is especially so in connection with the conversion of the thief and the scenes between the impostor-minister and the dying dance hall girl. They'll laugh at the comedy and choke a little in the dramatic scenes.

The star is surrounded by a thoroughly capable and well suited cast. Wade Boteler is a fine type for his pal, "Red" Barton; Fritzì Brunette is the girl who waits for him to settle his account in jail and Betty Francisco is the daughter of the leading churchman in Panamint. Others are Mabel Van Buren, J. P. Lockney, Bobbie Mack and Herbert Standing.

Story: The people of Panamint eventually learn from his own lips that their minister is an impostor, a thief. His reformation is brought about through the death of a dance hall girl. He is joined by his father, a clergyman; he serves an unfinished jail sentence and is rewarded by the girl who waits for him.

Good Combination of Appeal That Makes It Pleasing to Majority

It looks like you can not only please your patrons with "While Satan Sleeps" but also please your box office. It has both audience and box office appeal and you couldn’t ask for a better combination. You can’t judge every individual’s taste but to the majority, Jack Holt, in his first single starring production, promises to be completely satisfying.

If you know your folks favor stories in which humor and pathos is mixed you can feel doubly certain of pleasing them. Be sure to mention the author’s name and the fact that the story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post as “The Parson of Panamint.” The star has a following and you can count on gaining more admirers for him with "While Satan Sleeps." Catchlines will give you an idea of the story and the usual exploitation methods will get them in.

INTERIORS ........... In keeping with the story
DETAIL ................. Good
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Poor girl plans rich marriage anticipating a divorce and substantial alimony but falls in love with husband whom she nearly loses because of her previous plans
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .. 5,249 feet

Ethel Watts Mumford's story is the best and strongest vehicle Corinne Griffith has had in some time. It not only provides a broader role for the star but contains a genuinely fine audience appeal. "Divorce Coupons" offers a new and interesting angle on the unhappy marriage problem that adds to its value as entertainment and lifts it out of the hackneyed rut of pictures of this type. "Divorce Coupons" is capable of claiming distinctiveness and is certainly an appropriate story for Corinne Griffith.

Director Webster Campbell has provided a very worth while production and in the early sequences there is a delightfully realistic Southern atmosphere. Very beautiful locations are found in the picture and excellent photography is another good point. In the exterior shots particularly, well judged camera work makes the views all the more pleasing.

The director handles the story very carefully and with the exception of spending just a little too much footage in the climax, his work is better than the average. The interest is splendidly sustained throughout and the method of development is such that you cannot complain of it being at all obvious. There is no anticipation of the ending in "Divorce Coupons." The murder mystery episode is skillfully handled and a good suspense established.

Corinne Griffith, first as the daughter of a poor but aristocratic Southern family, and later as the wife of the millionaire, is the outstanding attraction of the film. She makes the most of the varied opportunities presented and in the emotional moments uses a proper restraint. She is always gorgeously gowned. Holmes E. Herbert and Mona Lisa do very well in the roles of next importance. The cast, on the whole, is a good one.

Story: Linda Catherton marries the rich and notorious Roland Bland fully convinced that she will divorce him but she finds herself in love with Bland who is devoted to her. Con, a former Pal of Bland's, finds that Bland is so much in love with his wife that he cannot rule him any longer. His plan to separate the couple ends in his own death at the hands of a woman who loves Bland but is near death. She kills Con to save Bland's happiness.

You Can Make Promises and It Should Be Worth While Getting Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The above synopsis is a very meagre outline of the story of "Divorce Coupons." It contains many more complications and interesting twists, particularly in connection with the woman, Ishtar Lane, the psychic, a character which adds a touch of mystery and suspense to the story. The production offers a very suitable entertainment and you can make promises for it and tell them it is the best story the star has had lately.

You might use catchlines referring to the girl who married to obtain a divorce and alimony but found herself in love with her husband. They will do for an idea of the story, but it is so much more interesting than you can suggest in lines, that it might be better to keep them guessing. Work to get them in because they should be well satisfied. Give the star good prominence and display plenty of stills. Tell them about her beautiful gowns.
Some Pointers About

BETTY BLYTHE

in

"How Women Love"

Betty Blythe fresh from her triumphs in "The Queen of Sheba," "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband." The most beautiful dramatic artist on the American screen.

Story founded on "The Dangerous Inheritance" by Izola Forrester, published as a novel by Houghton-Mifflin, now being syndicated in leading newspapers throughout the country. An elaborate society melodrama of metropolitan life against a background of wealth and operatic Bohemia.

Supporting Miss Blythe are the following players: Gladys Hulette, Robert Frazer, Charles Lane, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry Sothem, Henry Sedley, Katherine Stewart, Templar Saxe and Signor Salerno. These names must carry weight with all genuine "fans" and experienced exhibitors.

Kenneth Webb, who has been with the Whitman Bennett Studios almost continually since leaving Famous Players. He directed Miss Blythe in "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband."

By Dorothy Farnum, who wrote the scripts for "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband"—regular writer for the Whitman Bennett studios in conjunction with productions directed by Mr. Webb.

By Elsa Lopez formerly with Griffith and Famous Players—art director for "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband." The sets will be as elaborate as any ever constructed by the Whitman Bennett Studios for First National or United.

The atmosphere combines New York "high society" and "Bohemia." It is correct to the most minute detail. Two hundred extra and type artists are used in the "society opera" episode alone.

Hughes' First as Author-Director is Amusing Though Far-Fetched

"THE WALL FLOWER"
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR .................. Rupert Hughes
AUTHOR .................... Rupert Hughes
SCENARIO BY .............. Rupert Hughes
CAMERAMAN ................ John J. Mescall

AS A WHOLE..... Satisfying amusement at first but drifts into illogical dramatic business toward close

STORY........ A slightly new angle on the Cinderella theme; really a comedy-tragedy; pleasing for those who do not mind it being far-fetched

DIRECTION..... Good in early reels with deft comedy touches; latter reels not wholly convincing nor very well directed

PHOTOGRAPHY ................ All right
LIGHTINGS .............. Usually good
PLAYERS..... Colleen Moore an interesting figure and convincing in the principal part; a suitable cast including Richard Dix, Gertrude Astor, Rush Hughes, Dana Todd and others

EXTERIORS ................. Few
INTERIORS ................. Appropriate
DETAIL ................. Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Awkward and homely girl is transformed into graceful and attractive girl by woman whose sweetheart she falls in love with

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... 5,228 feet

This is Rupert Hughes' first production in which he is both author and director. "The Wall Flower" is, on the whole, a satisfactory offering which contains a story at first amusing and gradually drifting into a more serious dramatic trend that really borders on tragedy. It is an unusual combination but the development is logical enough even when incidents themselves are not. It is a more or less Cinderella theme with a slightly new angle.

The first few reels of the picture contains some amusing situations that will register as good entertainment with a big enough majority unless they happen to be the kind that demands strictly consistent incidents and object to anything far-fetched. The happenings in the life of "The Wall Flower" (Colleen Moore) are a trifle strained. It isn't plausible that a girl of her station should seek a place at a college prom and she certainly would never attempt to get by with the get-up which she wears. Natural intuition would tell her she'd be laughed out of the place. However, the idea carries a suitable comic angle which the author has taken advantage of to provide amusement and for those who will accept it as such, it fills the purpose.

The result of Hughes' first directorial effort is a picture of average satisfaction. It might have been more than this but the latter reels are not nearly as good as the first and he apparently was at a loss as to how he should end it. The conclusion looks like an afterthought. The logical ending would follow the girl's sacrifice when she gives up the man she loves because the woman who proved to be her fairy godmother is also in love with him. But an anti-climactic trailer brings about the happy ending in a fairly awkward fashion. The sub-titles throughout are good.

Story: Phin Larrabee plays a joke on his pal, Roy Duncan, and gives him the name of Idalene Nobbin as the pretty girl Roy danced with at a prom. Roy invites Idalene to the next dance but finds Idalene is a homely, awkward "Wall Flower." When they laugh and joke about her Idalene goes out and runs in front of an auto. The occupant, rich Pamela Shiel, takes Idalene to her home and cares for her. She transforms her into an attractive young girl and after complications are set aside Idalene marries Breen, formerly Pamela's lover.

Should Please the Average Audience. Exploit the Title
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

For the average audience, "The Wall Flower" should prove a thoroughly satisfying feature. They won't likely pick it apart for logic, reason, etc. but will accept it for the laughs it contains and a more or less effective heart interest which it creates for its heroine. Colleen Moore, in the role of "The Wall Flower," is capable of getting their sympathy and toward the close she fulfills the motto of "clothes make the woman" without a doubt.

Most any type of Cinderella story fills the bill with the average crowd. Use the author's name and tell them he wrote and directed this one. Appeal to your local high school boys and girls by telling them about the girl who went to the prom and was laughed at. Your own exploitation is that lines should get them interested. You can promise them they'll like Colleen Moore in "The Wall Flower." Play up the title.
Good Acting and Careful Direction Put It Over

Florence Vidor in

"THE REAL ADVENTURE"

Associated Exhibitors—Pathe

DIRECTOR ......................... King Vidor
AUTHOR ......................... Henry Kitchell Webster
SCENARIO BY .................... Mildred Considine
CAMERAMAN ...................... George Barnes

A WHOLE .......... Careful and intelligent handling of familiar theme makes interesting and satisfying entertainment

STORY......... A new angle on the neglected wife story: proves its point conclusively and maintains good interest

DIRECTION........ Good; tells story in straightforward fashion and particularly good in that he wastes no footage on unnecessary detail

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Satisfactory
LIGHTINGS ...................... Generally all right
STAR............ Appealing, very pretty, and possesses a good deal of charm. Plays the part with sincerity

EXTERIORS...... Pretty snow shots in beginning
INTERIORS ...................... Suitable
DETAIL ......................... Correct

CHARACTER OF STORY........ Wife whose husband refuses to take her into business confidences leaves him until she makes good at a career, wins his respect and his love

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... About 5,000 feet

King Vidor has taken a fairly familiar theme for Miss Vidor’s latest starring vehicle, but by skillful handling and deft touches he makes “The Real Adventure” a satisfying entertainment that will go over well in most houses. He uses the material at hand intelligently and always to the best advantage, proving the point of the story conclusively and to the spectator’s satisfaction.

One of the best features of Vidor’s direction is his entire omission of unessential detail. At no time does he waste footage on incidents that have but a vague connection with the story. This is obvious throughout the picture and there are times when he might readily have gone into detail, such as in the beginning, when his hero and heroine meet. There are no prolonged situations, no long scenes showing the courtship, the wedding, etc., just brief shots including the meeting, love at first sight, and the honeymoon. He gets right into his story without a waste of time. The story deals with the familiar neglected wife.

However, Henry Kitchell Webster has conceived a new angle to the situation that is brought out effectively in Vidor’s production. In this case it is not neglect brought about through the husband’s lack of affection for his wife, but the want of a better understanding between them. He holds his wife in the light of a toy and treats her as such while she begs to be taken into his confidences, to share his brain. This is an unusual twist.

Production values are up to the standard. Settings are in keeping with the story and the snow shots in the opening reel are especially attractive. The subtitles might have been a little better.

Florence Vidor, both as the wife and later as the costume designer, is appealing and possesses a charm that will reach her audience. She plays with a sincerity that makes the part real. Clyde Fillmore is not the most attractive of leading men but his work is satisfactory. Others are Nellie P. Saunders, Lilyan McCarthy and Philip Ryder.

STORY: Rodney Aldrich, a brilliant lawyer, prefers to “baby” his wife rather than have her share his business worries and triumphs. Rose is unhappy and determines to prove to him that she, too, has brains. She leaves him and joins a theatrical company as chorus girl, from which she graduates into costume designer. She becomes famous for her work as a designer and is just about to sign a contract with Ziegfeld when Rodney comes for her, admits his mistake and takes her home.

Promise a Pleasing Star and a New Angle on Familiar Theme

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The general run of picture patrons should find “The Real Adventure” an agreeable entertainment. Regardless of whether the story holds a particular appeal for them or not, they will hardly kick because their attention is held and they will like Florence Vidor. Her performance is sincere and she will be favorably received by practically everyone. She is beautiful and has a very pleasing personality.

You can promise a new angle on the marital problem and a good production. Use the director’s name and recall any of his previous productions you may have shown such as “Woman Wake Up,” with Florence Vidor, a recent release, and last year, “The Sky Pilot.” A good selection of stills in the lobby will attract your patrons and catchlines with the title should serve to bring them in.

SCENARIO BY ..................... Monte M. Katterjohn
CAMERAMAN ........................ David Able

AS A WHOLE..... Starts off as weak comedy; works up to live, actionful feature that will appeal to lovers of hero tales

STORY........ Not startlingly original but serves as good vehicle for star and will satisfy his admirers

DIRECTION...... Fair at first though very good in working up to exciting climax

PHOTOGRAPHY ..................... Average
LIGHTINGS .......................... All right

STAR...... Has plenty of good opportunities in this and makes good use of them

SUPPORT .... Adequate; includes Renee Adoree, James Gordon, Richard Tucker and Harry Gribbon

EXTERIORS ........................ Few
INTERIORS ........................ Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Wall St. man disowns son not inclined to work, goes away and returns to find his son has saved his business from ruin

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,920 feet

William Russell has about the strongest hero role that he has had in some time in "A Self-Made Man," his latest Fox release. The story is based on one by George Horace Lorimer which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It offers Russell a thoroughly appropriate role with a good variety of opportunities which he makes good use of. The prize fight sequence will offer a first rate thrill for the men and there is sufficient action in the film to make it a satisfying number for any average crowd.

At the outset the picture doesn't promise very much because the comedy business is made up of silly situations in which the star is a pleasure loving son of a rich Wall St. man. A trained bear in the hero's apartment is the only instrument of amusement, and the animal's owner hiding under a bear rug is supposed to be another mirth provoker. But once this sequence is closed, the picture becomes interesting and more a comedy-drama than a straight comedy.

The director has gotten in enough action to keep it moving and builds successfully toward the climax. He does not keep the denouement entirely concealed, but this is due partly to the fact that a title gives it away. You are presented with the facts: two brokers, each with a son; the first man's son is in partnership with his father and working for the business, while the second man's son prefers pleasure before business. Since the second man's son is the star of the picture and recognized hero of the story, you know he's bound to turn out all right, especially after the first man says "this is the kind of a son I have." The spectator knows he's bragging too early in the picture.

However, the fight between the two sons for control of a certain stock, in the absence of their respective parents, provides good excitement and a picture that will satisfy Russell's admirers particularly. Renee Adoree is hero's sweetheart who lends him the money to put over the deal.

Story: Because of a misunderstanding Anita Gray breaks her engagement to Jack Spurlock and following that Jack's father disowns him. Jack is working as a society reporter and attends a dance given by Anita. He overhears a conversation in which Hugo Bonsall, son of one of his father's competitors, is planning to ruin the elder Spurlock. Jack decides to fight and with Anita's financial help, he saves the business and wins back the girl's love.

Average Crowd and Star's Following Will Be Suited

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you cater to an average audience and one that is not hard to please you can satisfy them with "A Self-Made Man." Where Russell has a following, it will go very well and you can appeal particularly to his admirers. It should be easy to get the men in by telling them about the fight sequence and using stills in the lobby that will let them know the picture contains something that will appeal to them particularly.

Say that in "A Self-Made Man" Russell plays the part of the son of a Wall St. man who was disowned because he preferred pleasure to his father's business but later saved his father's company from ruin. You can make promises for the stock market fight and give the title good prominence. It is a good one and can be effectively exploited.
Doris May’s Latest is Farce Comedy of Fairly Amusing Quality

Doris May in "THE UNDERSTUDY"
R-C Pictures

DIRECTOR .................. William A. Seiter
AUTHOR .................. Ethel M. Hadden
SCENARIO BY .............. Beatrice Van
CAMERAMAN ................. Joseph Dubray
AS A WHOLE.........Fairly amusing farce comedy that is a bit silly at first but settles down to better things after first reel or so.

STORY ........Contains some originality and offers satisfying entertainment though pretty far-fetched

DIRECTION ......Of average quality; provides fair production and holds the interest satisfactorily

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. All right
LIGHTINGS .................. Good

STAR ............ Well suited and does good work; overacts a little in opening reel

SUPPORT ..........Wallace MacDonald good in hero role; Arthur Hoyt a poor comedian; others Christine Mayo and Otis Harlan

EXTERIORS .................. Suitable
INTERIORS .................. Adequate sets
DETAIL ................ Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY ..Understudy impersonates actress in a matter concerning a rich young man and an objecting parent; she wins both

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,557 feet

Doris May’s latest picture is an improvement over her recent releases but her story material is still a bit weak. "The Understudy" is better than either "Boy Crazy" or "Gay and Devilish," her last two features, but it is not strong enough to make more than an average entertainment. The business in the early reels is inclined to be of a silly nature and resorts to such worn-out slap-stick as the heroine sitting on a hat pin and dancing awkwardly, finally whirling in dizzy fashion and landing in a heap on the floor. This might get laughs in a two-reel slap-stick comedy in which you expect it, but it hardly amuses in a farce comedy.

After the first reel or so Director Seiter gets away from the frivolous stuff and settles down to a better and more substantial kind of comedy that offers some fairly original situations and amusing complications. The idea of the rich father taking a chorus girl into his home to reform her so that his son can marry her, is pretty far-fetched but it provides suitable enough screen material, gets over some laughs and at the same time includes an interesting romance. Its ending is more or less obvious but it isn’t so much the fault of the direction. The spectator just naturally anticipates such a conclusion.

It would seem that a little more fun might have been gotten out of the honeymoon sequence and it promises to be much more amusing than it is. However, it concludes by finding a suitor for the rejected star who has been impersonated by her understudy.

Doris May is suited to the role of the understudy and does good work for the most part. She overacts occasionally in being too vivacious. Wallace MacDonald makes a satisfactory hero while Otis Harlan is the unusual father. Christine Mayo is the actress who loses out in the race for hero’s affections. Arthur Hoyt seldom succeeds as a comedian.

Story: Grace Lorimer promises to have nothing further to do with Tom Manning and sends her under-study, Mary Neil, to collect a check from Tom’s father for agreeing to see his son no more. Instead of handing over the check, Manning takes a fancy to Mary who presents herself as Grace Lorimer, makes her remain in his home with promises of a new life. Sometimes later Manning wires his son to return. Complications follow but eventually Mary and Tom are happy while Grace satisfies herself with Cathbert Vane, a former suitor of Mary’s.

Will Satisfy Star’s Admirers and Others Not Too Critical

If they are not too critical and not to hard to amuse you may satisfy them with "The Understudy" but if they demand strong and original situations to please them in the way of farce comedies, very likely the picture won’t make a very favorable impression. Regardless of the fairly weak material, the interest is satisfactorily sustained and they can’t kick about not having their attention held.

Where the star has a following you will stand a better chance of putting it over because it is better than her last two productions and the title is one that can be used effectively with catchlines and can stand exploiting. Posters and stills will decorate the lobby and attract attention. Wallace MacDonald is a well-known leading man and his name might also be used.
Fearlessly it throws the light of truth on the age-old problems of the woman who loves not wisely but too well.
Joseph L. Plunkett is showing it to the discriminating patrons of the Strand, New York City.

DETAIL..................Requisite
CHARACTER OF STORY............. Political gang elect war hero as sheriff thinking they can rule him but they are greatly disappointed
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........ 4,583 feet

The last couple of Hoot Gibson releases show a big improvement over his earlier features and following the last one, "Step On It," which was very good, comes "Trimmed," another that will fulfill all the demands of the admier of westerns and gain some more friends for the star. There is good action and it affords the kind of excitement that suits the average crowd—plenty of riding, a thrill or two and a suitable romantic touch.

A First Rate Number For Any Admirer of Western Pictures

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors catering to a western loving crowd can safely book "Trimmed" and satisfy their patrons. It doesn’t matter that it isn’t strikingly original as long as it contains plenty of action, some thrills and the sort of material that goes over with admirers of this particular style of entertainment. "Trimmed" will fill the bill.

If you showed Gibson’s last feature, "Step On It," and they liked it, make promises for this one and tell them they’ll like it as well. Try and get them interested in the star. He has the right kind of personality for the stories he is given and he works hard to please his audience. Catchlines will tell the story and a trailer would be all you would need to bring them in for the feature.
The Strong, Definite Voice of the Critics

In the city of the shams it attacks and exposes this powerfully-directed, all-star picture received amazingly fine reviews in the dailies and drew more business in the beautiful 600 seat Cameo Theatre than other more widely advertised shows drew into two nearby big competitive first run houses.

FALSE FRONTS
From the story by S. BARRET MCCORMICK
Directed by Samuel R. Bradley
All-star cast including BARBARA CASTLETON FRANK LOSEE EDWARD EARLE

EVENING TELEGRAM: "'False Fronts' will be found very entertaining. It permits one to leave the theatre in a very pleasant frame of mind—which is, after all, what we go to the theatre for."

MORNING TELEGRAPH: "'False Fronts' is an entertaining, well acted and well directed film play. Edward Earle, who was recently crowned 'King of the Movies' plays the role of Keith Drummond with the charm and all the upstanding attributes of a football hero and only son of one of the F. F. V's."

NEW YORK TIMES: "When people have ideas which they independently seek to express in film form, they are likely to contribute something imaginative, or at least sincere, to the screen. 'False Fronts' was more simply and honestly done than most pictures of its kind."

NEW YORK HERALD: "There is a potent quality in this story of social hypocrisy. The course of the young Southerner is refreshingly different from the customary triumphs of bluff prosperity."

THE SUN: "'False Fronts' is a wholesale condemnation of making a big show of success, forcefully enacted by Edward Earle, Barbara Castleton and Frank Losee."

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Rich young man bored with life rescues girl and in the end discovers that it is all the joke of his friends

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......5,600 feet

“Nine Seconds from Heaven” is different from anything that has come across the water. It is built purely upon foreign standards and will appear much too morbid to many an audience. It contains reminiscences of “The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari” but is built upon a mystery that is clearly an invention and is so mixed with comedy that it is difficult to take the melodramatic situations very seriously. The great points in its favor is that it holds the attention in a remarkable way, is entertaining and different. The points against the picture would be its extreme morbidity, the very unattractive girls and young men in the leading roles and the fact that the hero fails to gain your confidence or sympathy.

Foreign Mystery Production and Something Different

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can safely promise them something different in “Nine Seconds from Heaven.” It is very different from the average American picture and will satisfy many who will welcome a change. Advertise it as a European mystery production.

You might tell them something of the story, enough to get them curious; but do not give the solution away or tell anything of the ending. Use a trailer of the rescue scenes showing how the girl is saved from the power of the hypnotist. It might also be a good idea to show some of the comedy shots so they know that it is not all horrors. If your audience likes only the conventional type of picture and there is any doubt in your mind, then better see this one first, for you know your people best.

Some Short Reels

"Cops"—Buster Keaton—First National
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

Once more Buster Keaton rings the bell. His latest comedy "Cops" is just as funny as "The Boat" and will bring down the house with laughter. The comedy gags roll out one after another and lead to a side splitting climax in which Buster is chased all over the lot by about 300 cops. Never have so many cops been assembled before in a short subject and in no comedy have the devices used to evade capture been so ingenious. And through all this Buster sails quickly and quietly; not once does his serious expression break and not once does he foretell a gag. As the reels unravel the laughs get closer together until at the finish it becomes all one long ripple. Such was the effect, when this comedy was shown to a Broadway audience on a hot, humid night.

Buster loves his girl but she refuses his advances and tells him to become a business man and earn a lot of money before she will marry him. He manages to find a purse with some money and also manages to prevent the owner from recovering his loss. With this money he sets out to conquer the world. In another part of town a fairly story is about to move. Buster buys the furniture from a pretender and gets a horse and wagon to move it. The people think he is the expressman and help him load up the wagon which he drives off. With the aid of an extension coat rack and a boxing glove Buster makes a signalling arm that not only stops traffic but knocks down the traffic cop. At one place Buster discovers that his old horse is not very responsive. He gets down and claps a pair of earphones on the horse's head; then returning to his seat, rings him up on the telephone and tells him to move on. The horse understands and moves on. And all this time the family are at their new house waiting for their furniture!

As the wagon moves, Buster sails his wagon of furniture into the main avenue where a police parade is taking place. In the grand stand is Buster's girl and her father who is mayor of the town. The wagon stops before the grand stand and Buster searches his pockets for a match to light his cigarette. Just then a thug throws a bomb from the roof of a building and it lands on Buster's wagon. Buster uses the fuse to light his cigarette, then he throws the bomb to the cops. This starts the grand chase in which about 300 cops run Buster all through the town and then back again to where he started. The furniture is wrecked to atoms by the crush of the cops. Many times he is surrounded or cornered but manages to slip out. And all this time the family wait on the steps of their new house for the furniture! In the end Buster runs into jail for safety. The cops pile in after him and when they are all in he slips out under and locks them in. But his girl rejects him and he throws open the doors. The next flash shows a little clock stone on which rests Buster's hat—but even this, after he himself is dead, hangs at a sauce angle.

Buster Keaton is irresistible and you can make no mistake if you show him to your audience. His popularity has grown and is on the ascent. He is the chief attraction of many a program and threatens to remain so.

Official Urban Movie Chats No. 22—Hodkinson
Type of production........................................1 reel magazine

This number of the Official Chats leaves out the usual Prelude, quoting some prominent man on prosperity and success, or telling your audience a two-by-four moral of "early to bed and early to rise." It leaves out all this and begins with pictures. Nina Wilcox Putnam, the popular novelist, is shown in her country home. She takes a few moments to advise her fat friends how to reduce by the use of a liberal diet. She tells you what to avoid and what to eat. Manila hemp is the subject of the industrial section. The machines that twist the hemp into ropes are illustrated. This section, however, would have been more complete if one or two shots were obtained showing the hemp as it grows. Some interesting shots of the copper rooster on top of the beautiful skyscraper in New York are next shown. The bird is thirteen feet high and ten feet wide and is said to be the largest weather vane in the world. Views from the top of the building fill a good portion of this review which ends with a series of shots of animals in the zoo. There are but five subjects to this number of the Review. The scientific and sport sections that were featured in the earlier numbers of this series are entirely missing from the last two or three. The omission of the sermon at the start of the reel will be welcomed by many.

Type of production........................................1 reel magazine

The opening shots of this number of Pathe Review take you on a personally conducted tour to Maritzburg, South Africa. The streets are lined with white men, negroes, dwarfs and children. The rickshaw men adorn themselves with gay masks and horns to prove they are equal to the beasts of burden. A special scientific study in evolution appears in this number of the review under the title of "Where Did You Get Your Face." Special drawings show the angle that the face makes with the base of the brain. Skulls of primitive men and ancient animals show, step by step, how man developed his forehead. This is followed by a little novelty showing a table and chairs in action. The cards deal by themselves and the chips move automatically and a whole game of poker is played without the aid of humans. In the arts and crafts section you see how the Navajo Indians make their rugs and a little nature chapter shows a mother bird feeding her young. The subject matter of this number of the review is quite varied and filled with interest. It is well up to the new high standard set for this series.

Type of production........................................1 reel popular science

Here is another of Prof. P. F. Smith's popular scientific reels. This time a gyro-designer is constructed before the camera from the simplest of materials. A tin funnel is attached to a gyroscope top and filled with white sand. The other end of the top is suspended to a wooden rod which is free to swing. The sand pours in a thin line through an opening in the funnel and when the top is spun elaborate designs are traced with the sand. The second series of experiments in this instructive reel deal with smoke rings. Rings of smoke are first made in the natural way by smoking tobacco and then they are made experimentally. A round hole is cut into a tin can and a sheet of rubber stretched across the opposite end. When the can is filled with smoke and the rubber bottom is struck, rings puff out of the opening. Various kinds of smoke is manufactured and an animated drawing shows the detailed anatomy of a smoke ring. The reel is instructive and will hold the attention of the average audience. It does not contain the appeal of the soap-bubble reel in the same series, but it is well up to the Prof. Smith's standard.
Type of production..................1 reel animated cartoon

Those who lay traps for others often get caught by their own bait,” is the moral of this number of Aesop’s Fables. The story is told of how the old farmer goes to the city and his little dog follows him and saves him from the schemes of crooks and gamblers. In one scene the farmer meets a flapper who cleans out his pockets but the little dog saves his master’s property by taking them back from the girl’s flapping galoshes. In the gambling den the farmer plays poker with two foxes, who pass cards to each other under the table. The little dog however manages to get the cards and give them to his boss. When the gamblers hold five aces then it is time to quit, and the farmer scoops up the coin and runs. They make a neat escape and return to the country. The animation is amusing and contains some very comical situations. It is well up to the average of the series and will please any audience.

Type production....................1 reel travel cartoon

The latest Mayer Travel Laugh is one of the most amusing of the entire series so far. First of all there are some interesting shots of the Paris shops and shoppers showing the hurrying crowds and there is also a view of Paris’s stock exchange. The artist, as usual, selects the more interesting types for his sketches which fade into the reality in a manner that always provides a laugh. Scenes of the markets and side-walk vendors furnish interesting material for sketches that are preceded by cleverly written sub-titles. One in particular was that which said the merchants gradually began to look like the things they sold. There follows a sketch which fades into a woman fish peddler and the comparison wasn’t over-drawn either. The reel is entertaining and should make up a good part on any program.

When the Devil Drives

By and With LEAH BAIRD

"When loves\woman stoops to folly, And finds\at last that men betray——"

The drama of life is played when the break comes; when woman is desperate and "the devil drives."

There are two women. Different homes and friends, different modes of living and yet, in the stress of circumstance, they are alike.

"Don't Doubt Your Wife" established Leah Baird's popularity. "When The Devil Drives" makes it doubly assured.

It is written with a woman's insight of what women like, and what men crave to see. Superbly produced by Arthur F. Beck and forcefully directed by Paul Scardou.

Boost for Quinn

Southern California Says He Has Done Great Work—Headquarters on the Coast

Los Angeles—J. S. Lustig, of the M. P. T. O. of Southern California, in a public statement says that J. A. Quinn has done "great work here" in carrying out his "better pictures" plan. Lustig urges exhibitors to support Quinn. His statement says: "The Better Pictures Association of the World has accomplished great work here. The Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churches, Advertising club, Rotary club, Club City Club publishers and leaders of every walk of life are solidly back of his program and assisting in B. P. A. membership drive.

"The local executive committee, whose integrity and fairness is unquestionable, is strong enough to influence the entire population."

"John A. Quinn, president of the parent organization of B. P. A., is visiting the leading cities attending formal launching of B. P. A. local divisions.

"All exhibitors are strongly urged to lend their hearty co-operation to Mr. Quinn and in the carrying forward the Better Pictures Association of the World program, which will be of tremendous benefit to exhibitors in many ways, including the sale of a new conception of the screen from hurtful regulations and restrictions.

Evidently Quinn has a definite organization on the ground."

Following the establishment of a unit in Chicago, he expects to organize other cities and establish offices in New York. Main headquarters will be in Los Angeles. Part of the plan, at least locally, is to review every picture before actual theater showings are given.

Ruggles Directing Ethel Clayton

Los Angeles—Ethel Ruggles will direct Ethel Clayton in "The Three-Cornered Kingdom" for R-C.

Illinois Consolidation Fails

Chicago—The meeting held at the Blackstone Theatre for the purpose of consolidating the Illinois M. P. T. O. and the Chicago unit failed to materialize. A resolution was passed to materialize the Hoy Reporting Service and exhibitors instructed to bring all of their complaints to the arbitration board. No exhibitor is to deal individually with Hoy.

L. M. Rubens, just returned from Europe, presided at the meeting.

Control by Licenses

The chief arguments for and against censorship as given in the report are here given in brief:

"For censorship:

"To protect the child from the shock of seeing scenes containing some of the experiences of human nature.

"To protect the innocent and undeveloped mind from suggestions of evil and violence.

"To do away with constant repetition of criminal themes.

"To prevent use by producers of situations which contain attractive dramatic situations but which allow the public a low moral influence.

"To prevent use by producers of groups and officials such as police, etc., from decorative purposes.

"To eliminate suggestions from films which might give false impressions to foreigners.

"To do away with the possibility of display of low films in poorer sections.

"To prevent vulgar comedies.

"To lessen emphasis on sex themes.

"To lessen the use of the domestic triangle.

"To present problems of the government by displaying obscene or immoral entertainments, etc., not adequate because not properly enforced, and in some cases not interpreted to cover motion pictures.

"Against censorship:

"It is undemocratic.

"It is un-American.

"It is impossible for state or Federal censorship boards to meet local conditions.

"It would delay releases.

"It would cost the public would be increased.

Start New Dept.

Fox Developing Educational Force—One Appointment Already

Herbert E. Hancock, in charge of the educational department at Fox, has plans for the development of that department to cover the entire country.

"Whether each exchange center will have a man covering schools and churches is problematical, but there will certainly be some appointees to take care of that class of business. At present, the educational product is not in shape for release and for that reason, a number of features such as "The Queen of Sheba," "A Connecticut Yankee" and "Over the Hill" have been re-edited to fit the needs of non-theatrical distributors.

McKean in St. Louis

The local Fox office will install an educational department on July 1st, with Claude McKean in charge. This department will handle 30 features, and a number of short subjects and comedies. Primarily, the department will cater to schools, churches and similar institutions, but in every case will endeavor to work co-operatively with the local exhibitor. The ideal plan would be to arrange for Saturday morning performances at the local moving picture house. In the event the exhibitor did not join the project the performance would be held in the schools or churches, etc.

Evan's Buys Witwer Stories

John W. Evans, Jr., has purchased the rights to "The Shooting Stars" series by H. C. Witwer, which recently ran in Collier's. This series is a sequel to "The Leather Pushers." Evans is planning immediate production.

Linder Plans Three Yearly

Max Linder who sails for Paris on July 5th plans to make three pictures a year for the Allied Producers and Distributors Corp. The first year's work will probably be done in Paris and then Linder will return here. "The Three Must Get There" a burlesque on "The Three Musketeers" will be the first release. It is completed.

Tomorrow, July 4th, being Independence Day and a legal holiday, there will be no issue of THE FILM DAILY.

Franklin in Charge?
May Handle Black String in New England—Many Houses Involved in New Deal

Ever since it became known that Harold B. Franklin was to head the theater department at Famous Players, retailers have been wondering whether he would give them attention to the situation in New England.

Beginning Monday, Famous Players-Columbia, Allied, and National will control the string of houses in New England until now operated by that company and Alfred S. and John A. Black as Black's New England Theaters, Inc. Black owned a 50% interest in the theaters with the controlling board of directors divided evenly between Famous Players and the Black interests.

In announcing in Boston the closing of the transaction, Black stated that after taking a real interest in New England, he would continue to remain with the company "temporarily in an advisory capacity." In view of the fact that Franklin, who has just stepped into his new duties has been frequently mentioned in this connection, Adolph Zukor was asked over the telephone on Monday whether any credence might be placed in the reports. When he reached his country home at New City he said that he had no statement to make that he had been out of town and that he could not deny or confirm the deal. He suggested publication of whatever Mr. Black said in his announcement. ** *

Black in Boston intimated that he was not exactly through with the picture business since his statement said that "it is also quite likely that he will be interested from time to time in the development of new theater projects."

The New England deal is one of the most important exhibitor transactions that has transpired in some time. The only other theater deal in recent months that might be compared with it is the deal Irving Berlin, Frank Harris and Harry of a number of their Far Western theaters by Loew's, Inc. In number, the Black-Famous Players deal is of far more importance.

which the former said he would stand by his first letter.

In vain, by the complaint, Nixon-Nirdlinger lovers that in order to make exchangers take over the debts and obligations of former owners when theaters change hands, the members of the Film Board of Trade have agreed among themselves not to supply service to exhibitors who refuse to abide by this ruling.

Nixon-Nirdlinger states that he intended closing a number of theaters for the summer and exchanges refused to transfer contracts from one house to another. Thus, he alleges, he sought permission of Masterpiece Film Attractions to transfer service from the Imperial, at 60th St. and Walnut; that he asked Metro, Vita-Graph, Inc., Exr. to supply service from the Jumbo at Front St. and Girard Ave., to the Montgomery and Girard Palace theaters; but that in both cases he was refused, because he failed to recognize the debts of the former owners of the Ambassador. He further states that R-C agreed to transfer several pictures from 52nd St. theaters to the Ambassador and later reversed its decision; that the Ambassador was refused a re-run of "The Trap" from Interstate Film until pictures previously contracted for by Ford Bros. had played there, and that Selznick having first agreed to switch service from the Rivoli to the Ambassador later refused to do so.

The plaintiffs are seeking an injunction to restrain the Film Board of Trade from operating in the manner and order to compel delivery of service as contracted for. The defendant named in the complaint are

In a suit in the Commonwealth Film Corp. against the Steinweg Ave. Theater Co., Inc., the Appellate Term has reversed a judgment for the defendant for $150 on a counterclaim and has directed judgment for the plaintiff for $63. The suit was brought for damages on a contract for "Mid-Channel," "played and paid," and "Whispering Devils" and the defendant counterclaimed for money paid.

John S. Porfrios, a taxi cab driver, filed suit in the Supreme Court for $50,000 damages against the Morehead Realty Corp., owner of the Capitol, Jerome L. Falconer, auditor of the theater, and John J. Garity, a police man, because he was arrested in connection with the robbery of the Capitol box office on Dec. 18 last. Porfrios was arrested and was held for sixty days until the robbers confessed and cleared him.

Opposition to Hoy
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Philadelphia—John S. Evans, president of the M. P. T. O. of Pennsylvania, in connection with the petition of Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger against the Film Board of Trade, issued the following statement:

"The M. P. T. of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, through an appointed committee acting for the entire M. P. T. O. has heretofore refused to consider the application of the Hoy System with its ruling knowing that it is not fair and contrary to all rules of equity as well as against the laws of our Commonwealth. They desiring to set themselves up as a tribunal above our courts and government.

"The climax was reached when the Ambassador, Philadelphia, brought a law suit, a matter that has involved each one of the members separately to restrain them from enforcing conditions and have made charges against them in restraint of trade and against the anti-trust laws, and the matter, besides being placed in the lower courts has been given the attention of the Federal Trade Commission."

Hoy Scored in Chicago
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—Charles B. Hoy and his reporting service were not handled in any very friendly manner in the handling of the Chicago and Illinois M. P. T. O. As noted, a motion was passed instructing exhibitors not to work with Hoy in this territory; the plan is strongly opposed here.

Newspaper Opinions
"The Dictator"—F. P. L. Rivoli

TUESDAY: The merely executed scene, while one of the best things in the comedy, is really typical of the others. They are all well done. Wallace Reid, as the hero, is back at his fencing and this means that he is altogether enjoyable. Reid, the gay comedian, is worth a dozen of Reid, the romantic lover, and in "The Dictator" he is as gay as he has ever been. If he remain in town this holiday week and find himself with a free afternoon or evening you may be glad to know an hour's joy in gaiety at the Rivoli.

N. Y. WORLD—Wallace Reid doesn't appear so flamboyantly good looking as he has in some of his earlier automobile comedies. The story itself is rapid fire entertainment that begins to explode with megrim toward its close, volleys of musketry on the screen being echoed by volleys of laughter. At sight of the two armies alternately chasing each other hardened critical were heard to break out with guffaws. * * * a highly entertaining picture, suitable for light summer wear.

N. Y. WORLD—Mr. Reid is a slick and we suppose, handsome, if not over-worked, gentleman throughout, and Lila Lee, with her sparkling black eyes and hair, is a distinctly beautiful Jewetta. Mr. Reid would add greatly to the effectiveness of his work if he would be so kind as to play through one entire picture without raising his left eyebrow in closeups and also without striking stereotyped poses to indicate love sickness. The swift shift becomes more and more objectionable as the mercurial climax.

THE AUTOGRAPH—The story in film shape seemed to be extremely burdened with detail, and there was much photography and upon the sets of the serio-comic army—some of them extremely droll and others so over-illuminated that it was short and pithy play was evolved into a very long and unprofitable picture, but there were some entertaining episodes and much vim. the taxi driver, was most hilariously portrayed by Walter Long.

DAILY NEWS—There is more comedy in this vehicle than one could possibly desire, but I think you will like "The Dictator."

Reform Drive in Mo.
Unprecedented Activity Under Way
—St. Louis Committee Supports Myers' Move
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
St. Louis—Rarely in the history of the state has there been such a concerted drive on the part of the reform element as is going on in Missouri these days. Everything is being done, with nothing undone to win their ends, even circulating propaganda designed to make the people believe there is something worth fighting about.

The Missouri Constitutional Convention is no in session at Jefferson City, and the reformers hope to have written into the basic law of the state, legislation that will forever restore state censorship, Sunday closing of amusement places and other of their pet theories on the people of the state. The sudden activity is due in a measure to a bill presented to the convention several days ago which would enlarge the constitutional guarantees for the freedom of the press to include freedom of the screen.

The Committee of 50, an organization composed of representatives of various religious associations of all denominations, has passed a resolution calling upon Missouri Senators and representatives in Congress to support the Myers Bill and to ask for a Constitutional convention for a Constitutional legislation regarding the so-called monopoly of the moving picture industry.

The committee also went on record as favoring national censorship and the enactment of a law that would (Continued on Page 3)

Hoy Opens in St. Louis
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
St. Louis—The Hoy Reporting Service opened its local office on Monday, July 3rd. Miss Schofield, secretary of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade, is manager. The name of the F. I. L. M. Club has again been changed to the St. Louis Film Board of Trade. The by-laws have been changed to conform with the Hoy system of accounting. Under the new plan the independent exchange members will vote as a unit on all questions affecting their interests.

Four N. Y. Units
For Affiliation With M. P. T. O. is Sydney Cohen's Plan—Promises
State-Wide Drive
The M. P. T. O. plans to launch four separate exhibitor units in New York State for affiliation with the national body. One will be in Buffalo, another in Syracuse, a third in Albany, a fourth in Binghamton. Sydney S. Cohen is quoted as saying this in the current issue of "Picture Play," a weekly film paper published in Rochester.

Speaking of the Buffalo unit, Cohen is quoted as saying:

“This Buffalo unit will be the first of four new state units. Others will be organized in Syracuse, for Central New York; in Albany, for Northern New York, and in Binghamton, for Southern New York. We now have 10 organizers in New York State alone, instead of one, and we are hoping to get light exhibitors as to our organization and our motives and purposes—now that the other side has had its say—will begin next week.

"Just as individual exhibitors or unaffiliated local or state units would be ineffective and helpless without national support, so the national body cannot function properly unless it has the unflinching support of state and local units. All five or six states in the Union are represented now in the M. P. T. O. A., which has a membership of more than 14,000 and it will be tough before the country is 100 per cent organized."

Burston Feature for Metro?
It was reported yesterday, "Forget Me-Not," produced on the coast by Louis Burston with Garet Hughes and Bessie Love in the cast, has been acquired by Metro. At the latter offices, no confirmation of the report was obtainable.

Smith of London Arrives
Harry R. Smith, of Smith's Film Sales, Ltd., London, is in New York and is making his headquarters with his American Representatives, the Edward L. Klein Co.

Smith brought several productions with him, and while here he will negotiate for the British and Continental rights on features and two-reel comedies.

"Conditions in England are steadily improving," says Mr. Smith, "and we feel that the crisis is passed and that the film business is again coming into its own.

Ernest Shipman yesterday wired from Ottawa that the Ottawa Film Prod., Ltd., after viewing "The Man from Glenary," voted to start work on "Glenary School Days" at once. The fact that "The Man from Glenary" was made to the stockholders' satisfaction at a cost of less than $50,000 when $70,000 had been voted for it was mentioned as a deciding factor. Henry McRae will direct and, through George L. Clarke, Pauline Garon and Mary Astor have been placed in the cast.

Sanford Plans One

Margaretville, N. Y.—Charles A. Sanford is to erect a house here.

in a specified time, the contract shall not be valid. In the case of series of pictures, an exhibitor will have to play one at a minimum of five weeks. Exhibitors will have the right to change one date on each picture, but when making the change must name the new play date. In the event that they fail to do so, the right may be revoked by the distributor. Another clause will be one now embodied in a good many contracts calling for a cancellation on an exhibitor's part of a series of pictures after he plays the first two.

Abortion is to be covered in the contract. A national board will probably be formed and a series of territorial units with the right of appeal reserved by both exhibitor and distributor to the higher body. If either party refuses to abide by the decision of the national board, the other party will have the right to cancel all contracts.

A clause covering a minimum admission price will be included in the pact and another permitting the distributor to go over the books of an exhibitor while the distributor's picture is running at that theater. In connection with advertising arrangements, it is understood the exhibitor will be allowed a 50% rebate on all his purchases at the end of the year, he has carried out to the letter his contracts with the distributor. This is to be effective so long as the exhibitor does not resell his accessory to another exhibitor.

Beck on the horns, "cello, harp and organ respectively.

Rivoli

Victor Herbert's "American Fantasia," is played by the orchestra at the beginning with Susan Ida Clough, mezzo-soprano, singing "The Star Spangled Banner." The Rivoli pictorial follows, and then comes a music film, "Spanish Dance," offered by Mr. Marmar. "Mountain Laurel," an old time screen melder, with changed titles so that it is not the same is the diversion and then comes a soprano-baritone duet by Miss Maude, with the tenor, Giuseppe Internaute, "The Dictator," starring Wallace Reid the feature, after which Mary Meschak's novum is brought in, "To some of Padowery's music and an educational coupled, "Step This Way," winds up the show.

Strand

James Oliver Curwood has one of his stories on Broadway, "James Country and the Land" being the offering and a Mermaid Concert "Spokes," furnishing the comedy relief. The overture consists of selections from "The Chocolate Soldier," with Kitty MacLaughlin and soprano, singing "Here We Are," "Odds and Ends," hailed as "The City of Contrast." "Polar Bear Hunters," "If a Table Could Talk," and "Roos of Athens" comprise the next number with Alex. Cherney following with piano renditions of a "Marinka," by Godard and Rochemanoff's "Prelude in G Minor." Joseph Martell, baritone, sings the prelude to the feature and the organist closes it as usual.

Ottawa, Can.—The Princess adapted a five-page folder, "Winners of the West" campaign book to put over the Universal serial. A Question and Answer Contest for children of the same years of age was arranged so that each competitor had to attend every episode of the serial. An original serial poster on which had a space for the contestant's name, address, age and school, as well as fifteen spaces for questions and a number of prizes. One question for each episode was flashed on the screen, each week, making it necessary for each contestant to witness every episode and at the end of the fifteenth episode all the contest forms were collected and cast in a sealed box. Winners' names will be announced at the showing of the eighteenth episode, after which the three prizes, a 1922 Valentine's Day from a ten and a five dollar gold piece will be awarded.

Sandusky, O.—When the Eagles were defeated by the Wolverines, Manager George Schade of the house bearing his name, decided to do something to attract the attention of the visitors, Red, White and Blue being the colors of the organization, he promptly bought numerous balloons of those colors and sent them away. After painting an eagle and the name of his house and attraction showing on one in addition he decorated his lobby appropriately.

When the visiting delegation of 800 arrived from Akron with 25,000 balloons, the populace concluded it was another of Schade's ideas. Why not? was the common thought. "Don't Schade get the others?" And the display clouded the city attracted many Eagles and other spectators to the box office, while Schade quietly listened to the applause caused by the waving of greenbacks. Will Hays Says Producers Will Work with Educators in Non-Theatrical Field—Cities Figures Special to THE FILM DAILY

Boston—(On behalf of an organization I offer to your association all of our facilities to aid in your experiments," Will Hays told an assembled American National Education Association last night.

Hays urged the appointment of a joint committee to study the needs of the non-theatrical field and find ways and means of supplying it. He related into the educational production of pictures in some detail and gave some interesting statistics on what had been done throughout the country in advancing the visual instruction idea. He said in part:

"In addition to the general educational use of entertainment pictures, we are to gather concerned, of course, with two additional phases; first, the pedagogic picture, and then the picture which is semi-educational entertainment. It's the latter that the motion picture is a distinct contribution to visual instruction. The quick way the brain is through the eye. Scientific tests which have been made and which are being made and with which you are familiar seem to prove the value of the motion picture in this respect.

Cites Results of Tests
"Professor J. W. Sheppard, of the University of Oklahoma during 1920, found that pupils who read from films scored an average of 74.5% of the assigned material.

"In the Spring of 1920 he conducted a test on about a dozen pupils in the average of one of the high schools of St. Louis, Wis. After and concrete subjects were taught to one group by means only, to a second group by a superior instructor and to a third group by an average instructor. The film scored an average of 66.9%, the superior teacher, 61.9%. In other words, the film beats the best teacher by 6.0% and the average teacher by 12.9%.

"Professor J. N. Weber, of the University of Kansas, during 1920 conducted a series of tests in Public School No. 62.

18 Rejections Out of 3,200
Joseph Levenson, of the M. P. Commission, was one of the guests at the weekly luncheon of the A. M. P. C. yesterday. He explained the duties of the commission in connection with the censorship of advertising matter, and at one point said only 18 pictures had been rejected out of a total of about 3,200 submitted in 11 months. He cited figures of the Government Census Bureau and said that advertising matter must be censored so that the country might be safeguarded against bad influences.

Levenson predicted that censorship would exist in New York no matter what the situation was like, and said public opinion would demand it.

Hays and T. O. C. C. Have Only Minor Points to Iron Out Before Signing Uniform Contracts

Negotiations have reached the final stages between the Hays group and the T. O. C. C. It is now merely a question of ironing out minor differences before the signatures can be affixed to the uniform contract.

There was a long meeting held yesterday in the Hays office at which were present Senator John J. Lile, Bernard Edleheithe and Charles L. O'Reilly for the T. O. C. C. and Elek J. Ludvig, chairman of the T. O. C. C. committee of the M. P. A. E.; Karl W. (Continued on Page 4)

New York City. The following is a result of committee meetings held on Saturday and Sunday.

"Four hundred and eighty-five pupils in the New York Educational Fund have been awarded scholarships for educational work of knowledge of film. When the experiment began, all pupils had an average basic knowledge of film. Today, however, they had gained from the knowledge of the people of New York. From this starting point (3.8 points) the New York Educational Fund set up a program of training through which the aid of correlated motion picture film improved the record of pupils. The pupils, who had previously been in the same classes with the aid of the film shown after the oral lesson, improved their knowledge of the subject. The aid of the motion picture film before the lesson was unnecessary. The film was used as a means of aural aid until the pupils could see that the lesson was close to the ground truth."

"As a new day from Paris, dated only two days ago, told how a class of medical students, in sufficient numbers, had invested $2,000,000 in motion pictures, the complete details of a wonderful operation upon the human body. Professor Jean Louis Faure. The film was shown before the class, and the actual progress of the operation, and as the operation proceeded the patient was visited. Professor Faure noted the surgeon described every movement made and told the operation's progress to the one who was to be operated upon. The whole line of the wound by the last stitch. In no way could it so great a number of students have watched the operation to be such a master of his profession."

"The New York Educational Fund will show films, together with the efforts of the producers and distributors. They must be, of course, psychologically and pedagogically sound."

Says Producers Are Interested

"The producers are interested in this work, but they cannot do it. The industry is eager to help. Up to the present producers have not been able to meet the requirements of the educational field. There are several reasons for this. First, the majority of producers are for strictly instructional class room films and cannot be considered. Further, a single film can be used over and over again. All educational films are produced and distributed by Attractions Distributing Corp."

In England the "block booking" movement is a localization of collections. The information revealed in the survey indicates that these showings will soon be made possible in ab turbis, which will be a very important factor from the viewpoint of the picture industry.

The investigation in Italy shows that business dealings are becoming easier, collections much better and that more theaters are being turned over to the films.

Germany, which was held to make the most threatening gesture toward America, is eager for American product.

Owing to unfavorable financial conditions Spain is almost as bad a risk for the picture salesmen as is Germany.

France, through a determination to advance her own film industry, also joins these two as a poor business field, because France wants her people to see home-made pictures at least equal in manner with imports. Thus, an American exchange booking pictures to French theaters, must also handle French pictures in order to get its own product on the French screens.

Belgium, which has shown such vigorous recuperative power, ranks only fair as a field for American made screen entertainment.

In Scandinavian area the demand for American product in Norway and Sweden; Denmark remains about at a standstill. Russia and the Balkans are impossible as immediate film markets.

India is showing probably the most encouraging signs of all the countries outside of England, in its desire for American pictures.

Australia reports business for American pictures as growing constantly better; many theaters heretofore devoted to drama and vaudeville are being turned into motion picture houses.

China, which is a film market only along its coast, is reported as having a fair demand for U. S. A. pictures, but even so is better than her most vigorous neighbor, Japan.

In the field of short subjects there will be at least six serials, although the names of only two are announced. These will be "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" and "The Radio King." There will be six more Leather Pusher stories; six Baby Peggy Century comedies, a series of Jack London's Fish Patrol stories, a Lumber Jack series and a series of International News novels called "The Mirror." The Baby Peggy comedies will not interfere in any way with the Century comedies, which will be released in blocks of 12 and sold in series. The Fish Patrol stories and the Lumber Jack series will each be eight in number. There will be a third group of eight two-reelers cut down from Harry Carey features and, all told, 52 outdoor action subjects are planned. There will be eight of the twelve of "The Mirror" series and the usual 164 issues of International News Weekly.

Myers in "The Prisoner"

Edward Laemmle's first European picture will not be "Ivanhoe" as planned. He will first make "The Castle Craneway" by George Barr McCutcheon with Harry Myers as star. It will be released as "The Prisoner" on the list of Jewels.

Church Report Says Some Regulative Influence of Motion Pictures Is Necessary

The fourth and final report of Dean Charles N. Lathrop, of the Social Science Commission of the Federal Council of Churches, is in the nature a summary in which the conclusion is reached that there must be a control exercised over motion pictures. The report holds it should be a national control but not by state or local self-government as a political censorship. "A number of conclusions," it reads, "are presented in this concluding section of the study of the motion picture problems of the country by the Social Science Commission of the Federal Council of the Churches [in America]. Must Have Control them to that there should be thought of and talked of not as a troublesome problem, but as one for which the trained chiefs of the community for religious, educational, and social purposes.-The chief executive of the organization.-The method of social control is best. But with those who are interested in the community there is a local task for every community that has a picture theater. In the every part of that and congregation there are men and women who understand clearly the position and for the situation in the local community. The method pursued in gathering information for the needed projects that are seeking light on the motion picture industry.

Wherever possible an interchurch committee should not only report on conditions, but should wrestle with the problem of standards and seek to develop a policy which the community may be able to adopt.

The facts are in hand and a judgment as to standards has been formed, it is necessary to determine a policy. No single right procedure can be prescribed, but some one course of action will always work. That is, to laterly a crusade against the picture exhibitions. They are a part of a big system for which the community has a moral responsibility. They are also members of the community. They may actually share, privately, the opinions of the film, as a result of the hard work, popular standards of art and morals maintained in the moving picture industry.

Social Control Necessary

The only question is, what measure and what kind of social control? It certainly is not a case of control, but of responsibility on those who produce and distribute pictures. It is no longer possible to do for the whole nation—ought to be done for the nation. There will always be great opposition from the people of the United States to a law establishing a national board of censors where there are no settled standards and where the pictures often present the news in a manner that makes the public feel that censors can easily be capricious, prejudiced, and unqualified.

"Many are thus brought to the conclusion that the present system of licensing, as well as this criticism and offer a better method. The censors of the present are not a test and the best method of control is left to the reader."

Another conclusion stands out clearly. The people locally, in a community, result effect good results by organized cooperation, which is the advantage of the community can register its judgment and its desires in the matter of the choice of films, working in cooperation with the producers. This kind of effort is only within the reach of very few local groups of people who really want to go forward together.

"Certain situations exist in which the church or the community center can exert direct and immediate influence on the news. When the social and recreational life of the community is centered in the church, the institution the exhibitions which it provides to be a substitute for community amusement. The true community church is, a church which can minister to a local community, as it sometimes go far toward filling the popular need."

"But all social betterment is ultimately a matter of changing the community's conception of the world. Whatever may be done to enrich the life of all of us who control the present order of things, should be done, but the progress of the world will be seen mainly in the hands of those who are still young."

Schools and Churches Can Help

"The public school and the religious education departments of the churches do not need to improve recreational standards, and do not want the same effect. "Romantic love, as the dominant motive of the film, is all of the stage and novel. Education of this impulse both on its intellectual and moral plane, is more voluntary than spiritual phases will furnish the permanent correctives that we seek. Sex education in the film is not only one of the most important and an approach to the unnaturalistic. This is not merely a moralizing, it is also a spiritualizing by the introduction of a doctrine of progressive--law of love, this motive becomes more dominant in all education and will all time, overcoming the evils of eroticism and sensuality."

"The prevalence of bad picture is due to the same causes that produce the same result: What is horrible in picture may be a family and maintain that the people are the rest of their kind. Make us prove it!"

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—When the Paramount-Empress presented "Mary Magdalene," the Frank N. Richardson, manager, got Dick Ricketon, Famous Players' exploiter to handle a window display contest among merchant houses. The boys offered to the one who arranged the most attractive co-operative tie-up ad for the price of the award, the house secured several free displays and the attendant publicity. In addition, the trick of sending heralds to all courts to announce the display, whether or not matrimony was a failure, giving two free tickets to all brides of the month, and digging up information for the public about three old couples with very large families as evidence of the success or failure of marriage helped.

Washington.—The idea of having amateurs perform is an old one, but for the purpose of arousing community interest it is very effective. M. Solomon, Universal exploitation representative, convinced William H. Greenblatt that fact recently when business at that house was not particularly good, the result being that instead of being closed, the business became reasonably good.

"Do As You Please" is a regular event there now both amateurs and professionals being eligible and three cash prizes are awarded. Of course, the friends of the performer turn out in body to offer encouragement and the box office is the strainer that strips the shingles from the multitude.

Denver, Colo.—The Rialto sold Wally Reid in "Across the Continent" by means of a spectacular parade. Manager A. G. Birch called together with ten Ford dealers in Denver, the tie-up being possible because the Dent car which is used in the picture is a flivver. Each dealer pledged himself to provide at least 20 cars, oil, gas, drivers and girls to occupy the cars for a parade. The Rialto furnished the band and the theater went $50 on the painting and the banner expenses. At first the city officials refused to allow the use of the roads, the cars or more, but Birch managed to get permission to send fifty cars through the downtown streets.

Heading the parade was a Fordson tractor pulling a trailer carrying the band. Both the tractor and trailer carried banners advertising "Across the Continent." There was also a banner to the effect that Wallace Reid for the first time drives a flivver. The city officers being true to their "Red" colors. The dealers also offered the Rialto to post their windows full of paper advertisement if they were given a share of the stunt including the band and paper cost, was only $26.00. Quite reasonable, packing the house.

Cassopolis, Mich. — Getting the division of public safety to distribute cards for a safe and sane suicide, using as a slogan, "Be careful in the handling — the arms and fireworks and you'll all go 'Smlin' Through.' 1922," was the campaign. The local citizens agreed that Owens was a public spirited individual.

Findlay, O.—W. K. Richards, of the New Royal using a court warning relative to Sunday performances to his own advantage. Hailed before the judge for offering entertainment at his house on the Sabbath and released only on the promise to heed the wishes of the reformers, he stated that the house was opened by the blue law minions by advertising Richard Barthelmess in "The Seventh Day" with this slogan, "It's been de- railed by the 10th. Saturday is 'The Seventh Day' on the seventh day, so you'd better come in the first day and avoid conviction. It was a catchy line and called their attention to the offering.

Yakima, Wash.—Maximum results at minimum costs were obtained by Manager H. A. Gillespie, when "Penrod" showed at the Liberty. Taking advantage of the special appeal to junior audiences, he promised the youngsters of the city a free Saturday matinee as a reward for their participation in a city "clean up" campaign. Simultaneously he offered passes to the kids who displayed the best signs for his "Penrod" opening the week following.

Early Saturday morning over 2,000 youngsters congregated at the appointed hour, invited by the manager to do everything imaginable. They used tin cans collected during the clean up campaign, shingles, pennants and banners of every size and color, and while some were barely legible others were surprisingly good.

The parade, three blocks long, cheered and sang its way to the theater and all Yakimans knew what was happening, the entrance to the theater being purposely retarded to give the full effect of the advertising sign. At the theater Gillespie had a special front put in representing the board and sideboard house that formed the meeting grounds of the American Boys' Protective Association in the days of the exploitation, which reached either directly or by word of mouth, the entire city was the rental of a Mack Sennett comedy that was special matinee and 25 passes to "Penrod."

Reid Has Good Comedy Offering

Wallace Reid in
"THE DICTATOR"
Paramount

DIRECTOR ......................... James Cruze
AUTHOR ......................... Richard Harding Davis
SCENARIO BY .................. Walter Woods
CAMERAMAN ..................... Karl Brown

AS A WHOLE... Good entertainment; something different for star and a much larger scale production than usual for him

STORY...... Bears a similarity to one or two previous film productions but is good comedy on its own account

DIRECTION..... First rate; more or less spectacular with fine atmosphere and great touches; mob scenes well handled

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Excellent
LIGHTINGS ....................... Natural

STAR........ Has strong role and does good work

SUPPORT...... Usual types well suited to parts;
Lila Lee has the lead; a good cast including Theodore Kosloff, Walter Long, Alan Hale,
Kalla Pasha and Sidney Bracey

EXTERIORS ....................... Attractive
INTERIORS............... All right

DETAIL............. Good; especially sub-titles

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Young American becomes involved in South American revolution and helps the "outs" become the "ins" winning the leader's daughter and the place of Minister of Finance

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,221 feet

Richard Harding Davis' story, "The Dictator," which is Wallace Reid's latest vehicle, is not greatly unlike one or two found in previous film productions, stories that dealt with very much the same situations as those in "The Dictator." Several years ago Douglas Fairbanks made "The Americano," with a comic opera story that had to do with an American who became mixed up in the affairs of disgruntled people of a Central American Republic. Then came John Emerson's and Anita Loos' "Red Hot Romance," fairly similar to the Davis story in that it also concerned a revolution in which an American hero played the star role.

But "The Dictator" is thoroughly capable of entertaining on its own account and offers Reid the biggest and most unusual part he has had in some time and presents him in a production made on a bigger and more spectacular scale than he is generally accorded. James Cruze has given the story a fine presentation. He has secured a highly satisfactory and pleasing atmosphere of the South American republic. The exteriors are fully appropriate and there are numerous very attractive shots. In this respect the film is a fairly spectacular one. The fight between the opposing factions is staged among the palatial buildings and squares and these mob scenes are all very well directed and supply much of the picture's action.

"The Dictator" is told in a straight comedy fashion with no satire except occasionally when the title writer has taken a whack at it. There are plenty of laughs and sufficient amusing situations to keep it going at a good pace and the laughs coming in rapid succession.

The hero's nonchalant handling of the enemy and his pal, the chauffeur's refusal to take the revolutionists seriously, even when they plan his execution, are only two of the comedy angles that afford much of the fun. The sub-titles are laughs themselves. They are all well written.

Story: Brooke Travers, son of a rich fruit merchant, follows the girl he loves to San Manana. She is the daughter of Rivas, who plans to overthrow the government and become president. Travers is accompanied by a taxi chauffeur who promises to stay with him until he gets the sixty dollars Travers owes him. Their adventures in the Republic which ends with Rivas getting control, through the help of Travers and the chauffeur, and Travers becoming Minister of Finance as well as the girl's husband makes up the best part of the film.

Laughable Situations That They Can't Help But Like

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This type of comic opera story is not sufficiently familiar to picturegoers to make that angle of it detract from the picture's value as entertainment. "The Dictator" is a good bit of entertainment that should amuse them all and make even the gourmets laugh. You can promise the star's admirers it is different from anything he has ever had and you won't go wrong in promising laughs.

Use the name of Richard Harding Davis, the author, and appeal particularly to the admirers of the star. Use the press sheet ideas for exploiting it. Say it is a story of love and revolution in Latin America. Do your best to get them in and they should go out satisfied. Use catchlines with the title to give them an idea of what it is all about and above all let them know it is comedy, that they can come prepared to laugh and enjoy it.
Great Action and Thrills in Typical Old Fashioned "Meller"

"THE FAST MAIL"

Fox

DIRECTOR........................Bernard J. Durning
AUTHOR..........................Lincoln J. Carter
SCENARIO BY......................Agnes Parson and Jacques Jaccard CAMERAMEN......................Geo. Schneiderman and Don Short

As a whole...Sure-fire melodramatic entertainment, the old fashioned sort that sets them rooting for the hero.

STORY......Short and snappy; has plenty of fast action and real live thrills; improbable but they'll like it.

DIRECTION......Gets in great action and puts over realistic thrills; horse race is feeble and poorly staged.

PHOTOGRAPHY..........................Good
LIGHTINGS..........................Natural
PLAYERS...Charles Jones a hero of marvelous endurance, capable of handling the part; Eileen Percy good as the heroine; others adequate EXTERIORS..........................Appropriate INTERIORS..........................Not very many DETAIL..............................Suffices

CHARACTER OF STORY..............Villain frames jockey who has won the love of the girl which is followed by a thrilling chase for a murderer.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.............4,880 feet

While "The Fast Mail" isn't really big enough to go into the class of "special" attractions, it contains more fast action and thrills than most short features of a similar nature. Bernard Durning has certainly brought Lincoln J. Carter's novel to life in a production that can boast of being the most melo of "mellers." But it is sure-fire stuff and for lovers of melodrama they couldn't ask for anything more complete than "The Fast Mail." It includes every trick of melodrama that was ever thought of, the kind that brings them to the edge of their seats and sends the gallery crowd into shouts.

Sure-fire If They Like Melodrama and Should Sell Easy

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The above is a meagre outline of the plot. The details of the thrills and action will best be appreciated by being seen. "The Fast Mail" is decidedly above the average melodrama but it is doubtful if it belongs in the class with specials, not because it isn't a seven or eight reeler but because it hasn't been produced on a very big scale. This isn't to say that it won't make money. It should.

Where they like old fashioned melodrama you won't want anything much better nor containing more action and thrills than Lincoln J. Carter's story provides. Bernard Durning has given it an excellent presentation and Charles Jones does plenty of risky business in supplying many of the thrills. Make all the promises you want for the action and thrills. If that is what they want, sell it to them as an A1 action picture and they won't dispute you.

EXTERIORS ............... Beautiful tropical shots
INTERIORS .......... All right

DETAIL ............................. Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY........ Wealthy young man, disillusioned by society girl he wants to marry, eventually marries an island girl who saved his life

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION…… About 5,500 feet

For some reason or other, a picture containing atmosphere of the South Seas or of Florida’s famous winter resorts, always seems to have a very definite appeal to the picture goer. In “Destiny’s Isle” it is Miami and a small tropical isle off the coast that provides the spectator with about five and a half reels of very beautiful backgrounds that make the picture a pleasure, as far as visual appeal is concerned, from beginning to end.

The director has shown good judgment in using all the exteriors he could and in the variety of shots such as the beaches, beautiful homes, gardens and bathing resorts. There are one or two fine airplane views of Miami and the coast towns that are especially interesting.

The story is an interesting romance that holds the attention nicely and will satisfy a big enough majority to get it over. Those critical and those objecting to fairly slight situations may find fault with it but even these should find adequate compensation in the feature’s pictorial value. The idea of the rich fellow meeting the island girl and falling in love with her is the most familiar angle but the remainder of the story is sufficiently original.

Earle tells it in a straightforward manner and never allows the development to become obvious. You don’t know just how it is all going to turn out. Some minor inconsistencies in connection with the island girl’s sudden entrance into society and the remarkable way in which she adapts herself to her surroundings are a bit implausible since she had apparently never associated with people of society previously. The subtitles are a bit too "flowery."

Story: Florence Martin permits Arthur Randall to kiss her because she thinks it will make Tom Proctor, whom she loves, jealous. Instead, Tom thinks she is in love with Randall. He goes for a spin in his motorboat, an accident occurs and he is rescued by Lola Whitaker, daughter of an island physician. Florence and her father locate Tom and, finding him with the girl, attack her character. To protect her Tom says he is her wife. The party returns to the mainland where Lola learns Florence loves Tom and she confesses that they are not married. Meanwhile Florence has proven herself unworthy of Tom’s love so he marries Lola.

Exploit the Atmosphere and They Should Be Pleased If You Get Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The average audience will be well pleased with “Destiny’s Isle” and unless you cater to a very critical patronage, you can feel certain that it will go over satisfactorily. Play up the tropical atmosphere and display plenty of stills in the lobby that will let them know that it is a story dealing with the Southern resorts. If you can secure a trailer of some of the very picturesque shots, it will be one sure way of arousing their interest and bringing them back.

The curious crowd will be attracted if you will tell them that the passenger plane, Miss Miami, which was wrecked with the loss of several lives recently, is used in the picture. You might do well to make an extra play on this as an exploitation stunt. Use the names of the principal players. There are no stars but Florence Billings, George Fawcett, Ward Crane and Virginia
Lee are well known to the “fan” audience.

CHARACTER OF STORY. . . . Daughter of trapper assumes identity of younger sister to save the latter who believes she has killed her betrayer

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION. . . . . . 4,738 feet

“Colleen of the Pines” is a good picture as far as production, direction and acting is concerned but it is rather doubtful if the story will meet with the same satisfaction. There has been such a run on stories of the Northwest with the Royal Northwest Mounted Police officer playing an important part, that people are beginning to tire of too much of the same thing.
Alexander uses the old familiar slogan of “get your man” as one angle and includes another fairly worn out situation, that of the stern, tyrannical parent who arranges his daughter’s marriage to suit himself.

Added to this there is the self-sacrificing heroine who not only assumes the parentage of her younger sister’s illegitimate child but also assumes her sister’s name and prepares to pay the penalty for the murder of the betrayer her sister believes she killed. Despite the commonplace material, careful direction puts it in the average class and there are many good touches and effective characterizations that make it sufficiently interesting to hold the attention. There is one very unconvincing twist at the end which avoids an unhappy ending but might have been gotten around in better fashion. The girl is told that the man did not die and that he intends to do the right thing by the sister he wronged but they do not explain why the warrant was issued for the murderer or how it happened that the man did not die.

Chester Bennett has done pretty well with his material except that several times he permits things to reach what the audience expects will be the climax.
Then he continues on until it leads to another near-climax. Otherwise his efforts show satisfactory results.

STORY: Joan Cameron lives in the Saskatchewan country with her father, Duncan Cameron, a grim, unyielding Scotchman, and her sister, Esther. While the father is away trapping, Esther elopes with Jules Perrault and returns sometime later with a babe, the child of Jules, who never married her. Meanwhile Joan has awaited the promised return of Barry O’Neill, an officer of the Mounted, although her father has promised her hand to Paul Bisson, a trapper hated by Joan. To save her sister Joan tells her father, when he returns, the child is hers. She leaves home and it is Barry who trails her for the murder of Perrault. The happy ending for all hands is brought about through the recovery of the supposedly murdered man.

Will Go Very Well Where They Haven’t Seen Many Like It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

With “Colleen of the Pines” it depends largely upon whether or not you have shown your patrons many of the recent Northwest pictures that have been released.
If you did not happen to play enough of them to get your crowd tired of seeing too much of the same thing, you will have a much better chance of pleasing them with “Colleen of the Pines.” It is good of itself but suffers from too great a similarity to many recent productions.

Jane Novak is a very appealing star and one who is usually associated with stories of the North. She has appeared in many pictures with Northern atmosphere and seems to suit these types of roles especially well.
She will please her admirers in this and you can make promises for her work. The whole cast is a good one.
Catchlines will tell the story if you need to let them know what it is about.
Average Northwest Picture But Lacks the Usual Curwood Action

"GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE LAW"
Arrow Film Corp.—State Rights
DIRECTOR .................................. Sidney Olcott
AUTHOR .............................. James Oliver Curwood

CAMERAMAN ........................... Lucien Tainguy
AS A WHOLE...... Very much on the usual order of Curwood stories; not as much action but offers average Northwoods entertainment STORY...... Rather slight and of a familiar character; pleasing atmosphere and given adequate production DIRECTION..... Sustains interest satisfactorily and has injected considerable pictorial appeal
PHOTOGRAPHY ...................... Very good

EXTERIORS .......................... Very pretty
INTERIORS ............................. Requisite
DETAIL ................................. Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Outlaw preying upon women of the North, wandering about in fear of capture, returns to cabin of his last victim and falls dead
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........... 5,332 feet

This latest picturization of a Curwood story is an average Northwoods picture that will satisfy because it tells its story in a well sustained fashion, is capably acted and contains first rate pictorial appeal. For those who don’t mind the absence of strong action it will provide adequate entertainment but the majority—have come to expect stories with much more action than Curwood’s “God’s Country and the Law” possesses. He has written so many more actionful stories that Arrow’s selection is a bit disappointing from that angle.
Sydney Olcott has apparently gotten the most he could out of the material by selecting an appropriate cast and supplying attractive locations that, with good photography, give the film a place with many of the previous Northwoods pictures noted for splendid pictorial appeal. He has also succeeded in sustaining the interest and tells the story in a smooth, straight forward manner, omitting unnecessary detail for the most part. Once, in introducing a period of the year—spring—he uses up a little too much footage in shots of animals, etc., that look like excerpts from a scenic reel.

There are but two fights in the picture that offer a very mild bit of excitement and the climax, too, is somewhat lame for a Northwoods story. The villain’s occupation is given as whiskey runner but his chief business is preying upon beautiful women. The story concerns his adventures with two different girls, a fiddler’s daughter and a trapper’s wife. The Northwest Mounted Police are included, of course, but their popular slogan is sadly neglected when two officers permit their man to escape in a stolen automobile and fail to give chase. Then, later, one of the officers fails to recognize the outlaw when he faces him in a tavern.

Gladys Leslie is vivacious and pleasing as the trapper’s wife and Fred C. Jones does good work as her husband. Wm. H. Tooker is nearly unrecognizable in his villainous make-up. Others in the cast are suitable and give satisfactory performances.

Story: Dore, a whiskey runner, evading capture, is given shelter by Poleon, a settler, but is driven off when Poleon finds him attacking his pretty daughter, Oachi. Later Dore comes upon a happy couple, Marie and her trapper husband, Andre, and is given shelter once more. He makes love to Marie and is beaten by her husband who sends him off and appeals to the Police. While Andre is away, Dore returns and carries Marie off. She escapes by jumping into the rapids, is rescued, and later Dore, haunted by his evil doings, returns to Andre’s cabin and falls dead.

Will Do Where They Have Not Seen Too Many Like It
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There has been such a run on pictures with stories of the Northwoods and the Royal Mounted Police late that it is up to the exhibitor to decide just what drawing power “God’s Country and the Law” will have. If your folks have seen most of the recent productions along similar lines, and some of the more actionful of the Curwood stories, they may not be thoroughly satisfied with the offering.

On the other hand if they are not too hard to please and usually accept an average feature good naturedly, you can play safe with Arrow’s picturization of the Curwood story. Mention of the author’s name should be enough to let them know what kind of a picture to expect and if they have seen any of the other adaptations of his novels, they will likely come in for this one. Of the players names, Gladys Leslie is probably the best one to use.

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Good

SUPPORT.............Customary types of Northern bad men portrayed by Les Bates and others; Ruth Clifford leading lady

EXTERIORS ................. Very pretty
INTERIORS .................. Suitable

DETAIL ......................... Requisite

CHARACTER OF STORY......Son of man dominated by trading post factor clears his father’s name and wins factor’s daughter

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,500 feet

While Walter Richard Hall’s story deals with trading posts, factors, etc., it does not include the famous Mounted Police. Nevertheless it is more or less unoriginal and rather weak in situations. Director Smith has managed, however, to maintain an even interest and the usual pictorial values go with the attractive locations selected for backgrounds. And there is nothing artificial about the scenery in this. The interiors, also, look as though they are the real thing. This is partly evidenced by the lighting which appears to be furnished by lights set up in the cabins. They are a bit dark and shadowy.

The material seems to have been used to the best advantage and while there isn’t very much action, the picture contains one or two good fights and dog-sled rides. Smith allows the ending to become fairly obvious too early and in this way the suspense is lost. He might have covered up the conclusion more successfully by some twist, even if it had to be somewhat unconvincing.

Johnnie Walker has fine opportunities in this hero role which he handles very well. His personal appearance does not fit exactly with the surroundings because he is more of a college type than the son of a trading post settler. Of course his father is in hiding which is sufficient excuse for his being in that country. Ruth Clifford is a pleasing leading lady and the remainder of the cast is adequate.

Story: Tom O’Day is in love with Dawn, step-daughter of the trading post’s factor, who warns Tom’s father to keep the boy away from Dawn or he will tell the police where they can find O’Day, wanted for murder. Later the factor tells Tom his father is a murderer. One day Tom overhears one of the factor’s henchmen threaten to tell O’Day that the factor had framed the murder on him. How Tom brings about the factor’s confession, clears his father’s name and wins back Dawn’s love, completes the story.

Will Satisfy the Average Audience

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Everyone should be satisfied to look at pretty snow scenery this weather and besides attractive locations “My Dad” offers an average good story that will satisfy them well enough unless you happen to be catering to a critical crowd. Then they may find fault. But with the majority of audiences it should go over well enough.

If you played any of the Fox pictures in which Johnnie Walker co-starred with Edna Murphy the star has probably gained a following and they will come in if you play his name up prominently. Stills will let them know the picture has to do with the North and an appropriate lobby display with the usual promises of it being “cooler inside the theater” should help to bring them in.

CHARACTER OF STORY . . . . . . . . . Tenement girl, at-

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . . . . . . . . 5,651 feet

Of all the modern cinderella themes "The Dust Flower" is about the most improbable and an introductive sub-title conceals a bit of apology for it, at the same time taking a whack at the cynics who may dislike it for its improbabilities and ends with a "hope"
—"but who wants to be a cynic?"—which is to say you must enjoy "The Dust Flower" or be classed as a cynic. However, Basil King's story is quite amusing and furnishes a suitable enough vehicle for the screen despite the fact that is pretty far-fetched.

It isn't so much the idea of the tenement house girl's being rescued and married by a rich young man that makes the piece improbable, as it is the butler's friendliness with his master's suddenly acquired wife.
He not only teaches her how to be a "lady" but instructs her in the sartorial art. In fact Steptoe is not a butler, but an all-around handy man as far as "The Dust Flower" is concerned. In this connection there is some thoroughly amusing situations which will likely be accepted in the vein they are intended—to satisfy laughs, or at least, to amuse.

Lovers of romance will be well pleased with Basil King's story and the happy ending will meet with their complete satisfaction. They will delight in the heroin's success in retaining her rich husband and the unsuccessful attempt of hero's former fiancee to win him back. Rowland V. Lee provides a suitable production and has secured a good cast.

Helene Chadwick handles the cinderella role capably but does not photograph as well in this as in some more recent pictures. James Rennie is the matinee idol type of hero and Claude Gillingwater makes a good deal of the role of Steptoe, the butler. Others are George Periolat, Edward Peil and Mona Kingsley.
The sub-titles are very good.

Story: Letty Gravely is about to drown herself to escape the misery to which she is subjected by her cruel step-father. She is rescued by Allerton, a mil-liionaire, who offers to marry her, thereby carrying out a threat to his fiancee to marry the first girl he sees, as the result of a quarrel. Allerton realizes his mistake but Letty refuses to accept a money settlement.
Barbara, the fiancee, persuades her to leave the Allerton home. Letty agrees, believing Allerton is still in love with Barbara. She goes to work in a cheap cafe but when Allerton learns that Letty's leaving him was a result of Barbara's talk with her, he decides that it is Letty he loves and not Barbara. There is the usual happy reunion.

Will Please Lovers of Romance. You Can Promise Some Good Comedy Bits

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can undoubtedly please the average audience with "The Dust Flower" and you might make a special appeal to the women members of your clientele because they are strong for Cinderella themes and romance such as that found in Basil King's story. You can promise them an unusual modern cinderella story and they'll be satisfied with the romance and amusement that it has to offer without finding fault with its im-probabilities.

Use Helene Chadwick's name and tell them she is quite pleasing as "The Dust Flower," a girl of the tenement district who marries a millionaire. That should be enough to get them in. They will want to know how she does it. Tell them Claude Gillingwater is a butler with a sense of humor. Goldwyn's press sheet for the picture is replete with suggestions for exploitation, catchlines and general advice for putting the picture over.

Another Curwood Story But a Little Different From the Others

“JAN OF THE BIG SNOWS”
American Releasing Corporation

DIRECTOR ...................... Charles M. Seay
AUTHOR ...................... James Oliver Curwood
SCENARIO BY .................. Eve Unsell
CAMERAMEN .......... Charles Gilson and Eugene French

AS A WHOLE...... Rather a bit different from the usual picture of the frozen North; satisfying unless they demand plenty of action STORY...... Chiefly romance and characterization; good development and nicely told DIRECTION...... Maintains good interest and tells story comprehensively; fine locations provide right atmosphere

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. All right

LIGHTINGS ................. Good with exception of few interiors

PLAYERS...... Warner Richmond does good work in principal role; Louise Prussing pleasing leading lady and others suitable and good types

EXTERIORS .................. Pretty

INTERIORS .................... Look real

DETAIL ........................ Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Wife of lost trapper is protected by members of trading post who abide strictly to their “honor of the big snows”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,531 feet

And still they come—picturizations of James Oliver Curwood’s novels. One of the latest, “Jan of the Big Snows,” is a good bit different from most of the author’s stories. Instead of the usual conflict, either physical or mental, and the well worn Mounted Police situation, this one deals mostly in love, characterization and morals, which gives the production some distinction as far as its story is concerned.

Charles M. Seay has used the material very well and it is doubtful if picture patrons will find fault because there is not the customary Northwoods action. The feature presents a trading post and concerns the code of morals observed by outwardly rough men, which they call “the honor of the big snows.” Woven into this is the love of the only white woman inhabitant for her trapper husband and the remarkable respect of the men of the post for this woman. Characterization is brought into play through the person of Jan, a young trapper and the leader of the seventeen men banded together through their own moral code.

The part of Jan is played by Warner Richmond, who is especially well suited to the role. Louise Prussing is the girl and William Peavey her husband. Richard R. Neill is the nearest approach to a villain, but his activities are considerably curtailed by the ever-watchful Jan. The trappers are played by carefully selected and appropriate types. Frank Robbins has a minor part, that of Mukee, Jan’s companion.

The director holds the spectator’s attention very well all the way through and while the ending is a little abrupt, it is quite logical and probably not at all what the audience will expect. No happy ending is tacked on and there is no wasted footage on unessential details. Pretty northern locations provide the right atmosphere and many of the interiors look like the real thing. The photography is about average and the lightings good except on some of the interiors, when they are a bit dark.

Story: Frederick Cummings returns to his trading post with a bride. At this particular post the men observe a strict code of morals and live according to what they call “the honor of the big snows.” When Cummings fails to return from one of his trips to the interior, Jan, a favorite among the trappers, sets out to find him. Jan secretly, but honorably, adores Nancy, Cummings’ wife. Rather than tell her he has found her husband dead, he promises Cummings’ early return. Later Jan saves Nancy from Blanding, a fur trader from the States. Eventually Nancy urges the truth from Jan and learns of her husband’s death. She returns to her people, leaving Jan hoping for the future.

Good Hot Weather Entertainment. Play Up Atmosphere and Use Catchlines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Where outdoor pictures go good you can be certain of pleasing them with “Jan of the Big Snows” and the title itself should be enough to let them know what kind of a picture it is. Then with the author’s name, the character of the story should be doubly certain. James Oliver Curwood is probably one of the best known writers of Northwoods stories and his name is enough to attract attention.

Display plenty of stills in the lobby and in connection with the story play up the idea of the trappers’ code of honor called “the honor of the big snows.” There is no one sufficiently prominent in the cast to warrant the use of names, but you can promise them satisfactory performances nevertheless. The picture should prove another effective hot weather number in view of its atmosphere of the frozen North.

Some Short Reels

"A Scandal in Bohemia"—Sherlock Holmes—Educational
Type of production........................................2 reel drama

The well known story, "A Scandal in Bohemia," by Conan Doyle, has been given an interesting and entertaining production. The offering is unlike the others already released in the series, but is just as good in regard to acting, direction and mystery. No time is lost in putting the story under way. Sherlock Holmes receives a note and visit from a mysterious gentleman who turns out to be the King of Bohemia. The king is very anxious to recover a photograph in the possession of a well known actress. Holmes dresses himself as an actor and substitutes in the play. He manages to chloroform the leading lady and take from her a photograph; but it turns out to be a picture of her sweetheart. After much trouble Holmes discovers the secret hiding place of the photograph, but when he goes to steal it he finds a picture of the lady inscribed to himself. A note explains that the lady has destroyed the compromising snapshot and has since married. This satisfies the king and saves Holmes from doing something not strictly on the level. Plenty of London atmosphere and good acting make this two reeler a splendid entertainment.

"Torchy's Nut Sunday"—Torchy Comedy—Educational
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

Here is another mild Torchy Comedy with Johnny Hines in the leading role. The production is not above the average of this series and is filled with gags executed in an indifferent manner. Hines is capable of much better comedy work than he has been giving his audiences of late. Over production is perhaps the main cause for this decline. He has ceased to be a comedian and has become a gag engineer. The comedies have no plot or continuity. They present a collection of gags, old and new, rattled off without very much bother or attention to story, character or continuity. In "Torchy's Nut Sunday" Johnny Hines is sent out to investigate a sanitarium. The comedy business centers around a lot of old men in wheel chairs. Home brew gets into the milk and puts new life into the community. The humor is very crude and will appeal only to the very simplest audience.

"Friday, the Thirteenth"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

As the title suggests, this is a hard luck comedy. Paul Parrot, Jobyna Ralston and Eddie Baker are the chief fun makers. Paul takes the part of a very superstitious young man who thinks it is hard luck to walk under a ladder or punch a cow in the nose. He avoids both, but gets into a lot of trouble when he tries to lift a horse shoe from under a policeman's foot. Then he spills the salt and is crossed by a black cat. Then to make matters worse, his girl insists that they be married on Friday, the thirteenth. Paul's rival, knowing his weakness, plants some dynamite in a dummy black cat and brings it to church. The result can easily be imagined. But nothing stops the ceremony. Some amusing comedy business takes place on the dock where Paul tries to throw over a bag filled with black cats. Most of the gags in the comedy have been used before, and while many of them are worth repeating, the offering as a whole will make but an average comedy filler. The photography is good and the directing up to the Hal Roach standard.

"High Life in New York"—Urban Popular Classics—Kineto
Type of production........................................1 reel novelty

High above the street level where electric lights shine and workers must climb to do their tasks—this is the subject of "High Life in New York." You see the iron workers scale dizzy heights and a window washer hang out from the top of a sky scraper. You see workers climb the large Broadway electric signs to change the bulbs and you also see shots of a steeplejack in action, and painters on top of a high bridge. The reel closes with some views of the world's largest clock with its 21 foot minute hand which moves about two feet every minute. Many unusual views of New York have been obtained in this reel which is certain to entertain the average audience and especially those who live some distance from New York. The photograph is good and the subject matter interesting.

"Improving America's Sheep and Cattle"—Urban Popular Classic—Kineto Type of production........................................1 reel agricultural

As the title suggests, this reel deals with the breeding and care of sheep and cattle. Many breeds of sheep and cattle are shown. Shearing, washing, branding and inoculation are all illustrated in this fairly instructive reel. You see sheep led to slaughter and the large pens from whence they are shipped. Texas bulls and large cattle ranches are also illustrated. The reel is educational and will hold the attention of an average audience.

Starland Revue No. 5—R-C
Type of production........................................1 reel novelty

The fifth issue of the Starland Revue continues with interesting, intimate glimpses into the life of stage celebrities. This one opens with shots of Marjorie Rambeau journeying to the theater where she is starring in "The Goldfish." The girls of "Tangerine" show how they keep in trim for their dances by going through daily gymnastics. There are other side-lights on the stars that make up the reel.

"Screen Snapshots" No. 1—Pathe
Type of production........................................1 reel fan magazine

Screen stars are caught off duty in this fan magazine. You see the Lasky Studio Orchestra with Wallace Reid at the traps. Cecil De Mille takes a hand and Theodore Roberts is on hand. Colleen Moore in the audience talks to Bebe Daniels, while Thomas Meighan has some fun with Tom Forman. In other shots of this magazine you see Doug Fairbanks as he looked before he tampered with his face and grew his mustache. Included in this amusing fan magazine you see Charlie Chaplin, Gloria Swanson, Adele Ritchie, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Herbert Rawlinson and Sunshine Sammy. The reel is chuck full of the stuff that picture audiences love to see. They know them all and will be glad to see how they look off duty. Should do very well as a program filler before any audience.
Short Reels

“The Dumb Bell”—Hal Roach—Pathe

Type of production.................................1 reel comedy

This time Snub Pollard gets a lot of fun out of the situations. He plays the part of a movie director. In the first part of the story Snub plays the part of a ham actor who is fired by the temperamental director. The bosses of the company arrive and offer Snub the job if he can manage to fire the director. This he manages to do, but when he becomes the director of the company then his troubles begin. Marie Mosquini takes the role of the leading lady and helps in the comedy business. The situations are amusing and will get several good laughs. The story will interest picture fans, for it takes them behind the scenes. The comedy business is up to the high average of this series and offers something a little different from the ordinary run of things. Should do well be-

“Beyond the Horizon”—Kineto Review

Type of production.................................1 reel travel

The title, which was taken from O'Neill’s drama of the sea, is a fine one but it certainly does not fit the subject of this travel picture. In fact it has nothing to do with the cities of Sydney and Melbourne. The first sub-title tries to link Australia with “Beyond the Horizon” by saying that Australia is far removed from Broadway. Street scenes in these Australian cities fill up the greater portion of this reel. The cameraman did not stay long enough in either place to get anything but a superficial surface glance. Such views are hardly typical of a land that is greater in area than the United States and just as rich in beautiful scenery and vast in natural resources.

Eight pictures that brim with action, sparkle with humor and grip with human-ness, form the current Group of Goldwyn Pictures.

Every picture has exploitation angles that mean business.

Strong Pictures When You Need Them Most!
Der Boss

Owns a city. Not just a theater or two. But they think so much of him. That they write songs about him. And sing them in praise. When they get the chance. All of which is about Ben Blumenthal. Of Express & Import.

Now around New York, Ben Blumenthal is pretty important. Everybody knows he is strong in the European field. And has been for a long time. They know he is a silent worker. They also know he has as a partner in many foreign ventures Joe Goddys. Of Goldwyn. Or maybe its First National by now. They also know that he is with the Hamilton Corporation. Which deals with Famous Players for foreign productions. They know he is mixed up in a lot of film business. But it's dollars. To all the doughnuts you can eat. That they don't know. That he is the plain unadulterated. One hundred per cent. Boss of Buda Pest. And if you think that means nothing. You come on over. To Buda Pest. And see the liveliest city in Europe. Not barring Paris. And meeting any city anywhere. At cathedrals. Despite that Zukor. Morris Kohn and Bill Fox left here a long time ago—and I'd like to know why.

There are over a million people here. And several thousand of them were at the biggest resort there on the Saturday night. That Ben entertained Jesse Lasky. And Gilbert Miller. Of the Frohman company. And Ralph Kohn. And several others. Then. All of a sudden. The whole place seemed to get hopping. To the fact that Ben was there. And the orchestra played a selection. Written about him. And called "Oh, Mister Blumenthal!" And the chief violinist. Came to his box. And there was enough bowing. And scraping. To make you think Blumenthal. Owned the place.

WHAT HE DOES OWN

Buda Pest. Blumenthal doesn't own—but he is the owner of the most beautiful theaters in Europe. With possibly one exception. Called "The Vigszhinaz." Which. In English means "The Comedy." It seats 1800. And really is a magnificent place. If it was located on Broadway. Near 42d street—and golly that place seems far away from here—it would be worth about five million. For the ground alone. And the house could not be supplanted here. So Ben says. For another 2 million. Thats the kind of a house it is.

DOING A FEW COUNTRIES

A la Jesse Lasky. Which means getting in one. And wondering whether the next can be as beautiful. For instance. In San Sebastian. In Spain. Jesse told Gilbert Miller. Who is championing her. That he wondered if the next country could be as beautiful. And wasn't it better. To stay there? Because they only had a limited time anyway. But Miller pushed on into France. And in Paris Lasky asked the same question. From Paris—and it took a gimlet. To pry Lasky from Paris. They went on to Berlin. There Lasky intended to make a long stop. Visit Rome. And go home. But in Berlin they started in with a banquet. Where everybody who was anybody. Was present. Including Pola Negri. And Mia May. And a lot more of celebrities. Including Sudermann. The great poet.

And playwright. There were so many speeches. That Lasky was dazed. But he saw it through. And the next day, Kohn and Blumenthal sold him an idea. To go to Buda Pest. So Rome won't see him. And except for Hungary. It is a question if any other country will. Lasky loves Buda Pest. And he cannot be blamed for that. If it wasn't for moving the studio— From Hollywood—he might stay here forever. But instead of that. He is collecting a lot of postage stamps. And the funny currency. Of these countries. For his boy.

So far he has collections from seven. By the time Austria is reached there will be another added. And then. With the aid of a strong will power. Lasky hopes. But just hopes—he admits it is weak on the subject—to sail for home.

ON FOREIGN BILL BOARDS

In the old city of Prague. And it's some old. There can be no doubt of that. These names appear. That is—if you can make them out—in the funny type used. Mary Pickfordova. In Madama Butterfly. Viola Dana. In some unsplendid title. Douglas Fairbanks. And Fatty.

Now here is an interesting thing about Fatty. Of course they refer to Arbuckle. Over here. And this is written from Buda Pest. But in all continental countries. Including Germany and France. Fatty is looked upon as a hero. His first releases. After his trial. Were grabbed up like the proverbial hot cakes. And he is still going stronger. Than any other American star.

STANTON'S IDEA

Dick Stanton. Former Fox director. Over here working on a big international idea. Getting finances from several countries. To produce big pictures. With locations in each of the foreign countries. For special release in the States first. And later over here. Has a lot of money already subscribed. Working to get he rest. Figures the idea will go over big. But that doesn’t stop Bill Fox. From telling Dick. He can have his old job again. When he finishes playing around. As Bill calls it. Fox, by the way, is in Germany now. Don’t be surprised. If Harry Reichenbach is found exploiting some of the Fox specials. Later on. They have had several. Chest to chest talks.

ABOUT NEGRI

Who sails August 15. For the States. With Blumenfeld. To make several pictures. Before returning to Germany. When Negri hits the States she will make a sensation. She is a wonderfully attractive woman. With much magnetism. No one knows yet. Or seems to. Who will direct her. In the modern material she will make. But some director is going to be lucky. Lasky says he hasn’t decided yet. But when the American newspaper folk. Get to her. She will set them up. Good and hard. That’s a bet. She understands some English. Which makes her all the more attractive.

HOW IT’S DONE

One of the very first American releases in Berlin. Is “Joan the Woman.” Famous officials here have changed it all about. The prologue and epilogue are out. The titles have been removed. And Schiller’s famous lines. From his celebrated poem. About Joan of Arc. Have been substituted. And those who have seen it. Say it’s there.

But it’s deplorable. To think of the many good new pictures. That won’t be shown here. For many, many months.

HARD TO GET AWAY

Boys—and this is a tip—don’t ever promise to leave a place like this. Stick around until you’re broke. And then try and borrow some more. It’s a regular place. And that goes all three ways across the board.

L. A. Can Seat 300,000

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—Sid Grauman is authority for an estimate of the number of seats there in Los Angeles, placing it at 35,000. This includes downtown and suburban houses and with about 90,000 ready to be filled at more than two shows daily, the possible number of people that may be accommodated is increased to 225,000.

Taking cognizance of the fact that four and five shows are given daily in many of the theaters, 300,000 is a nearer total, he figures.

“To say the town is over-seated,” explains Grauman, “is to overlook the growth that comes with these houses.”

New Starring Series for Acord

New Color Process
Based on 1915 photographic and Projection Methods—Claim It Is 95% Perfect

A new color process which is the invention of Lloyd Brown, who has assigned it for about 4 years, is being exploited by the Silent Drama Syndicate, a trust which claims to have a capital of $2,500,000 to work on. C. B. Hurt, one of the trustees, and James L. Burke, who is organizing a concern to market it, are in the East from Los Angeles, and have taken office space with B. F. Porter.

In explaining the invention to THE DAILY, Burke

"We have completely eliminated ringing and developed a colored film which is not hard upon the eyes. Our development of these results is based upon a method of chemical development, but upon an original way of photographing and projecting the film. A double-lensed camera is used and the material is shot through yellow and green color filters, so that we expose simultaneously. These lenses are printed in black and white on the film but thrown on the screen through color filters.

"On our positive film, we use 56 percent of the screen exposed, and by side instead of the ordinary 16, and here we save 63% of film. It is important to note that the running speed is one-half that of the ordinary projector, thereby allowing much of the wear and tear and actually quadrupling the life of the projector.

"Regarding future business plans, no definite statement was made. The concern will be incorporated, but just when and in what state, Burke could not definitely say. As to projection problems, he declared that the new film will have only one set of sprocket holes, running through the center and between the rows of images, a special attachment would, of course, have to be employed. This, however, will be obtainable by the exhibitor for about

Franklin the Chief Elected President of Black's New England Theaters—Black Will Advise

Despite the reticence of Famous Players officials on that part that Harold B. Franklin will play in the company's theater affairs in New England, it can be stated quite authoritatively that Franklin will be in complete charge of the theater chain. As a matter of fact, Franklin has already been elected president of Black's New England Theaters, Inc., and all of that company's subsidiaries. Alfred S. Black's only interest in the theater properties will be as an advisor.

Black Heads Ice Poles, Inc.
Boston—Alfred S. Black has taken over the presidency and a large portion of Ice Poles, Inc., a corporation controlling the production and manufacture of an ice cream novelty that is selling widely in New England. The process is a combination of ice cream, cone and lolly pop, the cream being frozen on a stick in the shape of an inverted cone and covered with chocolate. Black believes that with the general trend toward lower prices, this novelty selling at five cents will have a widespread distribution. He thinks it will have a special value for children's matinee.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Sews along your idea. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

A simple post-card costing $6, advertised "Fool's Paradise" for the Regun, developed a mailing list, created a lot of talk, and brought abundant good-will to the theater. A week before the opening it was announced with slides that anyone who had given an old law that one free admission brings in a couple more paid admissions worked so the box-office did not suffer perceptibly. Fred Green, exploiter for Famous Players, was responsible for the idea and John G. Iraman, manager of the theater, put it into effect.

In this way the Regun put over a post-card stunt and the public did the work. It furnished a list of 6,000 names and although there were approximately 1,500 patrons given the old law that one free admission brings in a couple more paid admissions worked so the box-office did not suffer perceptibly. Fred Green, exploiter for Famous Players, was responsible for the idea and John G. Iraman, manager of the theater, put it into effect.

Song Exploitation for "Main Street"

Eddie Bonns and Lou Marangella of Warner Bros., have written a song called "There Is A Main Street in Every Town, But There's Only One Broadway," which will be used in the exploitation of "Main Street."

Exhibitor Loses Tax Battle

(Moos Jav, Sask.—Judge Ouless has decreed against William Clark, an exhibitor, who brought action to have the municipal 10% tax annulled. The Saskatchewan Legislature passed a law making it optional with a community whether or not the new burden is to be imposed and when this city took advantage of it, Clark secured an injunction against the city, subsequently losing the case. A total tax of 20% is now being collected.

Buys It at Auction

Conventer, N. Y.—W. R. Perrin has purchased the Gralyn at public auction for $25,000.

New Color Process

(Continued from Page 1) $45 and used in conjunction with any standard type of machine. In this respect, he also remarked that recently, some difficulty was experienced in projecting the film because of a stray ray of light which seemed to come from a polished surface. This has been completely eliminated, Edward Pomeroy, one of those who has worked on it.

Pomeroy Developing Scheme

Los Angeles—Penrhyn Stanlaws has completed "Pink Gods," in which there will appear a new color process in the backgrounds of the art titles. Roy J. Pomeroy is the inventor of the process which uses a positively charged stock coated on both sides with emulsion and a similar image. At present, Pomeroy is photographing paintings for use in titles, but with the aid of a special camera, he later hopes to use it for regular motion pictures.

Call News Censorship "Vicious"
The "N. Y. World" in an editorial on censorship, refers to the control of news reels as "inherently vicious."
The item in part reads:
"Censorships of any sort are sufficiently bad, but there is a distinction between censorship of entertainment and censorship of news. The first does little or no good and may do much harm; the second is inherently vicious. Not only the political action of a democracy but its social and moral standards are determined by the citizens thereof in a basis of what they see and hear of the life about them. Unless the theory of a democracy is tenable, no man or body is wise enough to decide what shall be seen and heard. They must choose that for themselves as well as they can. It is little enough and far too fragmentary at best, but to censor it is to corrupt opinion at its source."

Cuts and Flashes
Glenn Hunter's third starring production will be "The Lap of Luxury."

Ernest Hallor, cameraman has returned from Italy where he worked with J. Gordon Edwards for a time.

Erno Rapho conductor of the Capitol on the East, is en route for Europe to secure musical novelties.

"That Woman," starring Catherine Calvert, is now in the final stages of editing.

National advertising, in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines, will be launched by Metro Pictures in the Fall.

Six Earl Hurd Comedies, a new series of cartoon comedies each in one reel, will be released by C. C. Burr through Educational next season.

Paramount has inaugurated a new style in its press book. From now on, the book on each production will be of full newspaper size, printed in newspaper style on a fine, heavy grade of stock.

Tee-Art Studios, Inc., have been engaged to build the sets for "Timothy's Quest" being made by Dirigo Film Prod. Sidney Olcott is the director and Chas. M. Sey production manager. Exteriors were taken in Maine.

TIME—"An honest motion picture. It is a regular old-fashioned, smash-up-and-get-the-bad-men kind of a thing. There is not anything new or startling in the way of story, but it is well done and well acted. The acting is especially good. It is a very good picture."

Talking Films Again

University of Chicago Announces Invention—Trustees to Push Its Development

Chicago—The laboratories of the University of Illinois, claim to have developed talking motion pictures through a new method of reproducing sounds.

The invention is the work of Prof. Joseph Tykocinski. Atty. L. Abbott, president of the university, that patents had been applied for by the school and the institution would develop the scheme, and that if it was successful it would be turned over to the public at a nominal profit.

The apparatus to receive sound consists of an ordinary telephone receiver. The sound is reproduced on a strip of film alongside the regular film. By means of a cell which is sensitive to light and the amplifiers used in radio this sound is reproduced simultaneously with the picture, it is claimed.

Court to Dismiss Suit

Supreme Court Justice Finch has granted an application to dismiss the suit of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., against the International Film Service, and Nathan Burkan on the contention that the court has no jurisdiction and the papers do not set forth a cause of action. The plaintiff did not appear to oppose the dismissal.

King Directing "Streets of N. Y.

Burton King starts today directing "The Streets of New York" at the Ideal Studio, for the State Picture Corp., the latter having bought the copyrighted play through the Packard agency. The company also purchased the old negative which was made in three reels about 10 years ago. The picture is being made with an all star cast including Tyrone Power, Edmund Breese, Sheldon Lewis, Virginia Pearson, Robert Frazer and Virginia Lee, and Kate Blancke.

In the Courts

A default judgment for $2,071 has been filed in the Supreme Court against the Midtowne Theater Co. by the Greater New York Export House for carpets and linoleum furnished.

A default judgment for $3,329 has been filed in the Supreme Court against Mildred Harris Chaplin in a suit of the Chaplin-Meyers Pictures Co., to recover on a note given to Louis B. Mayer at Los Angeles on June 26, 1921.

Supreme Court Justice Donnelly has directed the Pacific Film Co., to accept an answer of the Ara-Beo Film Exchange in a suit by Pacific to recover films being distributed by the defendant on the ground that $6,250 is due the plaintiff and the defendant is refusing to account. Harry Lewis, for the plaintiff, said the defendant "is in bad straits" and owes its employees for six weeks.

In connection with the suit of Edward Maurelli for injuries sustained in the Estes Studio, it should be stated that while the Estes Studio & Laboratory Co., is named as a defendant, the action is really being pressed only against John T. Glavey, because Glavey and Glavey Productions leased the studio for the picture that was being made when Maurelli was injured through the alleged negligence of the employees of the lessee. The owner of the studio is named also for technical reasons, but denies any responsibility in the case.

cummer. Selections from "Cavalleria Rusticana" are offered by the orchestra for the overture, with the Rialto Magazine following. A music film, styled "Burnest Dream," by Marjorie Peterson and Betty May comes next and then the spectators see a Tony Sarg animated cartoon, "Noah Put the Cat Out." Roberto Rotondo, tenor, sings Verdi's "Te Deum" and the musical program being further supplemented by Frank Stewart Adams' rendition of a medley of Southern melodies on the Wurlitzer.

Rivoi
Ambrose Thomas' "Carnival of Venice" is the overture with the Rivoi Pictorial following. Melba Tally, soprano and Susan Ida Chough, mezzo-soprano, sing Offenbach's familiar Barcarolle from " Tales of Hoffman," after which the feature, Thomas Meighan in "If You Believe It, It's So," is flashed on the screen. A tetrachromatic number is "Voices of Spring," with Paul O'Farrell and Martha Mason. "A Trip to Paramounttown" is "a glimpse back stage at the stars and screen" and "What a Difference a Little Hair Will Make" is another Marcus cartoon.

Strand
Lincoln J. Carter's old-time melodrama, "The Fast Man," comes to the screen this week at the Strand. "F. O. B., Africa," a Monty Banks comedy is another hit number, the rest of the celluloid program consisting of a Sport Review, "Once Upon a Sunday," and the customary Strand Topical Review. For the opening, selections from Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller" are offered, with a xylophone solo by Edward Montray included in the opening portion of the bill. "Cora Tracy, contralto, augments the musical part of the show, with a rendering of "Oh Promise Me," from De Koven's "Rabin Hood," and the prologue to the feature is sung by Joseph Martel, a baritone.

Elsie Ferguson in "Outcast"
A John S. Robertson production
By Hubert Henry Davies
Scenario by Josephine Lovett
Released December 11, 1922

The story is a powerful and genuine drama of a man who goes down to the depths and is rehabilitated by a woman whom he then seeks to cast off. However, a great love develops. In every sense "Outcast" is a 100 per cent box-office attraction.

“IN THE NAME OF THE LAW”-F. B. O.’s smashing winner—fairly knocked ‘em off their seats Sun. July 9 at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, B’way at 43rd, New York City. With theatrical business at a standstill—with picture houses yelling “murder”—“IN THE NAME OF THE LAW” packed ‘em in to capacity all day long, and turned away hundreds of people besides. ALL RECORDS FOR A PICTURE OPENING ON BROADWAY IN NEW YORK IN THE MONTH OF JULY WERE SHATTERED—CRASHED—SMASHED AND BUSTED INTO BITS. We told the world we’d do it and we’ve done it. It has made good beyond our wildest expectations. And backed by the positively sensational exploitation all prepared for every city, town, village and hamlet in the United States and Canada, “IN THE NAME OF THE LAW” is going to swing oceans of coin into thousands of exhibitors’ tills.

What Goes With

“IN THE NAME OF THE LAW!”

Written, Directed and Produced By Emory Johnson

A real milestone in the history of the Moving Picture Industry.
2. An advance trailer that will stimulate a desire in every man, woman and child in your town to see this remarkable picture.
3. A gorgeous set of 4 oil paintings that will add class and beauty to every theatre lobby in America.
4. Specially designed local advertising campaign for your local newspaper with headlines, and copy that will be the talk of your community.
5. A 4-page especially printed, specially illustrated newspaper that will make the patronage of your town unanimous.
6. A line of posters destined to be the talk of your industry for months, giant, compelling, pulling posters beautiful to the eye, designed also for cutout purposes and guaranteed to drag the crowds.
7. Local tie-ups consisting of exploitation that will make your whole town gasp.
8. National tie-ups already made that will make you grateful that you have an opportunity to book this picture.
9. Special police caps that you can afford to give away in quantities, and that will set your boys wild.
10. Special police whistles that will give you tremendous boy power advertising.
11. Specially made metal police badges that the kids will fairly scramble to get.
12. Special silver paper police badges that you can give away by the thousands.
13. Special star buttons.
14. Novel police revolvers the actual size of an automatic that will make every kid in your town a walking, talking press-agent.
15. A special circus herald that will make your patrons think that the whole Barnum-Bailey show has hit your town.
16. A clever cut-out padlock for every door in your town and a dozen more advertising, publicity and advertising stunts to make “In the Name of the Law” the biggest box-office you ever exhibited.

Let your own judgment be your guide.
Write for a copy of the press book and sell yourself.
EXTRA.—We are holding back the master stroke of all—a sensational local co-operative tie-up that will make your place packed house headquarters for the entire length of the run.
If you don’t get “IN THE NAME OF THE LAW” for your house don’t blame us. The prints are in our exchanges. Bookings and play dates are NOW being arranged. If you “muff it” don’t blame us. You have your opportunity now. Tomorrow may be just one day too late. ACT!!!

Fox Leases Two

Extends Engagement of “Nero” at Lyric and Will Present “Monte Cristo” at the 44th Street

Contracts were signed yesterday whereby William Fox leased from the Shuberts for the coming season two of their theaters for motion pictures. The first lease signed was for the Lyric, of which he had a summer lease terminating in a few days. Owing to the success of “Nero,” Fox secured a new lease which will carry him through the winter. He will extend the run of “Nero” until Sept. 3rd, and on Sept. 4th will launch “A Little Child Shall Lead Them.”

The second theater leased by Fox is the 44th Street. He will take possession Aug. 14th and will present there “Monte Cristo.” Following the engagement of these two pictures at the Lyric and the 44th Street, Fox plans to show “If Winter Comes, The Town That Forgot God,” “The Shepherd King.”

“Silver Wings” will continue at the Apollo until Aug. 20th, when the Fox lease expires.

Newark Sunday Shows Legal

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Newark, N. J.—Sunday shows were upheld in the First Criminal Court when a jury of six found Ray Denener, manager of the Fox Terminal theater not guilty for keeping open on Sunday. The cause was made as a test and was brought after Director of Public Safety Brennan had given the Central Amusement Co. a permit to operate a theater in Roselle on Sunday. Downtown theaters claimed they were discriminated against.

Operators Firm

Won’t Stand for Any Reduction in Wages—Mass Meeting Held at Central Theater

The Moving Picture Machine Operators’ Protective Union, Local No. 366 held a mass meeting yesterday at the Central Theater yesterday morning when the special sub-committee of training of directors of the T. O. C. C. addressed the men and asked for a 10% wage reduction. The union has no intention of respecting the exhibitor’s wishes. Leo Brecher, Bernard Edlecher, Billy Brandty and Al Harstn represented the T. O. C. C. They all delivered addresses and stressed the necessity of securing a reduction to make both ends meet.

The stand of the T. O. C. C., as explained by an exhibitor, is this:

But without a reduction controlled by members of the business the union has fallen off about 80% as a result of the general financial depression, but rentals and wages have not come down. We have proposed that operators accept a voluntary cut of 10% in wages, and that mass meeting at the Central was an aftermath of a conference between our committee.

At present, there is a sliding scale of wages, depending on the seating capacity of the house. The operator works eight hours a day and six days a week, for which the average renumeration is about $52 a week. Relief men who work about half as long receive almost as much. An operator is not a skilled mechanic. Anyone can be broken into the work in three hours and in two or three months can reach the maximum of efficiency.

Asked whether, in event of acceptance of the cut, and improvement of conditions, the operators would receive an increase again, it was stated that the organization has given the men voluntary additions to their rate, and that their work would in the future had not been determined.

Monopol Has Short Reel Units

Monopol Pictures, Inc., has purchased 12 Dorothy Gish, 8 Wallace Reid, 6 Lillian Gish and 26 Keys톤-Sennett productions. It is the intention of Monopol to distribute these films as short reel units, combining a star subject with a Keystone-Sennett production. This gives Monopol 26 units, which will be released one every two weeks commencing Aug. 1st on the state right market.

Bach Resigns

Out of Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., Gerald C. Akers to Replace Him There

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Toronto—W. A. Bach has resigned as general manager of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd. He will be replaced by Gerald C. Akers, who is at present one of Sydney R.Kent’s chief assistants at the Famous quarter in New York.

Bach will step out of his present position on Sept. 1. He is now in Northern Ontario vacationing with his family. In all likelihood he will take over active work in a non-theatrical company in which he has a financial interest. He plans a trip to New York in a few weeks.

At Famous Players, it was stated yesterday that Akers had already assumed his new duties in Toronto and that no successor in New York had as yet been selected for him.

Sam Saxe arrived in New York from Los Angeles yesterday ready to buy pictures for Southern California. He will be here for two weeks and is stopping at the Hamilton.

Wells May Be Re-elected

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Ocean View, Va.—Jake Wells seems to be the favorite for re-election as president of the M. P. T. O. of Virginia.

There are about 100 film men here, many from Washington. Yesterday there was an automobile tour and a matinee at Keith’s. This was followed last night by a shore dinner. Tonight the ball will be held and it will be in this that the Losy party will figure prominently. There are 18 stars from New York.

The weather is terrific hot but apparently everyone is happy.

Phila. Suit Ends

Settled Out of Court—Fred Nirdlinger Virtually Recognizes Film Board of Trade

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Philadelphia—Injunction proceedings instituted by Fred G. Watson, Fred Nirdlinger and Thomas M. Love against the Film Board of Trade of Philadelphia have been temporarily dropped in Common Pleas Court No. 5, when Judge Monaghan, after a day devoted to hearing in open conference that the competing interests reach an amicable agreement “out of court.”

Acting on Judge Monaghan’s suggestion, counsel for the interests involved, together with the principal sailors in the case, effected an amicable adjustment for the present and announced a continuance of the case without date.

The agreement stipulates that Nirdlinger and Love are not to discriminate against the Film Board of Trade, and that the board is not to hold the plaintiffs responsible for contracts or agreements made by the former lessees of the Ambassador, about which house the controversy centered.

The peaceful settlement yesterday brought to a close, temporarily at least, a suit in equity that promised at its commencement to be fraught with bitterness on both sides.

Nirdlinger and Love entered suit for the purpose of obtaining preliminary injunction to restrain the Film Board of Trade from exercising further jurisdiction over any of their theatrical interests.

During the hearing on the suit, it developed that Nirdlinger and Love had instituted proceedings as the result of their dissatisfaction with one of the regulations of the Film Board of Trade, which organization, they claimed, controlled bookings in Philadelphia.

Amsterdam Here

Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, one of the defendants in the Nirdlinger suit was in town yesterday but could not be reached for a statement.

Powers Leaves for Los Angeles

P. A. Powers left for Los Angeles Tuesday night on a regular inspection trip of the studios.

After Oct. 1, all houses in New York State seating 100 or more must obtain certificates stating that they have complied with the recent amendment to the State Labor Law. Plans will have to be filed with the state industrial commissioner or local authorities by those building theaters, the object being to avoid disasters, such as the breaking in of tools due to weight of snow.

Fred Jackman's first for Mack Sennett is "Bow-Wow."

YOUR NEGATIVES—ARE THEY SAFE?

The film vaults at laboratories at Flushing, L. I., meet all requirements of the fire department. Consequently, the insurance rate on negatives is extremely low—in fact, lower than any other laboratory in New York: 43.8 cents per hundred.

We make no charge for the storage in our vaults of customers' negatives, and will gladly provide the use of cutting and examination rooms, if desired. Our new plant has a capacity of 3,000,000 feet a week, and our Tube System of developing eliminates all handling of the film, assuring absolutely uniform and clean prints.

Newspaper Opinions

"In the Name of the Law"—F. B. O. George M. Cohan Theater

TOMES— "A hokum picture. It is muddy and sentimental. It is often crude because of the innumerable and unimportant details which clutter it. It never reaches any real climax, but, instead, rambles and gets nowhere! The film, as a production, is jumpy and uneven, but whether this is due to bad direction or poor assembling of material is hard to tell."

HERALD— "As the culmination of this series of the best court room scenes presented on the screen * * * It is a picture that does not always grasp the attention, but on the whole it can be recommended to Police Commissioner Enright, who can in turn recommend it to his fellow citizens."

TRIBUNE— "A melodrama—which starts off like "The Old West" but during the run of its six reels seems to be imitating several of our very best sellers. It is certainly a splendid picture. The people concerned give very good performances."

AMERICAN— "It is difficult to see why such an absolutely illogical series of events could have been screened as carelessly as this particular picture has been screened.

The best in the affair were a cat that appeared in the first part—a gorgeous cat that had all the other animals beaten to a frazzle; a dog, and several children. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH— "A dramatic and thrilling screen narrative."

X. X. WORLD—The story is thick and fast * * * but it's a right human thing, and shows up the author's skill in the plot, however. It is well worth going to see. The photography is without flaw."

DAILY NEWS—"Because "In the Name of the Law" accomplishes the well nigh impossible, it may be put down as the kind of a picture America needs from beginning to end, I think it should be voted a good picture by anyone who has seen the best of his particular kind."

LOU WALTER—"My estimate of the film is not bad, it is interesting."

SUN.—"The prevalent mode of "family" scenes has been tied to a tail to this somewhat sentimental, but there is a court-room scene, where the cop's eagerness is wrongly tried for murder, that would be interesting even to offenders for the commonest kind of thrill."

EVE. TELEGRAM—"* * More or less, a melodrama with type, yet, vital, clean and wholesome."

EVE. JOURNAL—"The story is about a policeman and his family, but you don't have to wear brass buttons to enjoy it. The film is very entertaining because it is the "American family" to the screen. And it doesn't snarl."

POST—"* * Has a lot of thrills but is only mildly diverting."

"The title of the picture is scarcely mentioned. The story is hackneyed and relies on all the old discarded tricks for its interest. Furthermore, the picture is incoherent, jumpy, and poorly directed. It contains many scenes inserted merely to prolong the suspense or those who can become aroused over a purely mechanical device. The acting is done in and out of the spirit of the film."

GLOBE—"* * It would be hard to imagine a more machine-made affair than this. Evidently Mr. Powers and his co-workers set about to produce a picture with the maximum amount of wholesomeness, heartaches and thrills; and it is sufficient to say that this affair has crossed their efforts. "A thrilling bank robbery, a police round-up, another revolution, a story that will astound the stenographer's pern—" all here. For obvious advertisement reasons.

Out of Associated Exhibitors

When Harold B. Franklin resigned from the Shea Enterprises of Buffalo, he also resigned as a director of Associated Exhibitors. Since that time, no election has been held to fill the vacancy made by him.

Constance Binney in Paris

Constance Binney is in Paris today, where she will be the guest of the exhibitors' association there. According to a cable received by weekly, "a Bill of Divorcement" has been completed in London.

J. L. and S. May Sell

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—It is reported here that J. L. and S. have sold some of their smaller houses on Madison St. and concentrate their attention on the new McVicker's which will open in the fall.

Recently in connection with the leasing of the Randolph by Universal it was stated the rental was set to be $3,000 a week. This would total $780,000 for the year five term. When the lease was filed for record it was found the rental is $9,500 a month or $70,000 for five years.

The McVicker's Theater Co. has given a trust deed to the Standard Trust Co. (for $400,000) five years, and 7% secured by the playhouse property on Madison St. on which the new McVicker's is now being built.

In the Courts
A new complaint has been filed in a Supreme Court in the suit of Nathan P. Schulberg against aimed Artistic and the stars charging that corporation, to recover $100,000 and as much more as is due to be due when the case is heard. The complaint alleges that from April to July, 1920, the plain rendered services as broker in posting of the foreign rights to gain United Art pictures toarris Greenhill or a corporation hired by him, for which Schulberg was to get 10 per cent of amount received by the defendants. He alleges that they have received at least $100,000.

Although the case is still pending in the courts, it was stated in behalf of Don Meany that his suit against Clark-Cornelius Corp., for damages for breach of a contract to make pictures out of old Christie negatives, has been settled and a substantial sum has been paid to him by his attorney, Nathan Burkan in his best

Borzage's Next
Frank Borzage will next direct "Pride of Palomar" for Cosmopolitan Prod. It will be made on a coast and Borzage together with the crew he has maintained, leading man O. O. Tolk, assistant director; William Strom, manager and Chester Conn, cameraman, are now on their way West.

Row Over "Snapshots"
Harry Charnas Makes Claims Over Distribution While Jack Cohen Refuses Them

Cleveland—M. W. Brum, attorney for the Standard Film Service Co., of which Harry Charnas is president, has sent Jack Cohen a letter regarding the advertising of "Screen Snapshots.

The letter states that Standard holds a contract with Screen Snapshots, Inc., for the release of 26 numbers for five years and that Standard has the right to advertise the product as Screen Snapshots. The communication takes exception to an advertisement which appeared in the "Interstate Film News" of Cincinnati in which Charnas said that "Screen Snapshots" could only be released through Pathé.

Jack Cohen stated yesterday that he had inserted his warning ad in the Cincinnati regional only after Charnas had advertised in the "Pittsburgh M. P.Bulletin" that he would continue the release of the reel. Cohen claimed that Charnas had purchased the pictures for Ohio, Michigan and Western Pennsylvania in 1920; that in 1921 the series had gone to Fed-erated and that the 1922 product was going through Pathé. He asserted that Charnas had purchased another series of pictures along similar lines and had advertised to exhibitors in his territory that he would continue the release of "Screen Snapshots.

Independent Output 200% Greater
W. E. Shallenberger, of Arrow, yesterday commented on the compilation of next year's output as it appeared in THE FILM DAILY of June 30. He said:

"According to THE FILM DAILY, issue of June 30, there are 986 features promised for release in the 1922-1923 season, as compared with 887 during the past year. This is a highly significant fact that out of the 986 features, 929 of them will come from the independents.

"During the past year there was a great deal of talk about curtailing production, despite how fact there will be more pictures available for the theaters this year than there were last. This, in itself, is cheering news. The greater feature of it all, though, is that the independent producers have advanced with such tremendous strides. Last year they contributed but 126 pictures to the quota of 887; this year they stand ready with an imposing array of feature productions—195 in all, an increase of 20.2 in other words, an advance over last year of more than 200%. Another thing must be taken into consideration in the fact that fully 60% of the 513 pictures to be released by national distributors were made by independent producing units.

Arrow Meeting Next Week
Arrow will hold a sales conference next week at which Fall plans will be discussed. J. S. Jossey and T. A. Curran, special representatives, are coming to town from Chicago and Dallas for the meeting.

A. N. Webster, of Syracuse, has presented the series of Four Corners for Upper New York. He will operate under the name of Progress Pictures, maintain headquarters in Syracuse, but may open offices in Albany and Buffalo.

Two Redels for Pathé
"The Range Rider Series," a series of two-reel Westerns starring Leo D. Maloney will be distributed by Pathé. Releases will be one every two weeks beginning early in the Fall.

Is Operators' Advice to T. O. C. C. As Means of Reducing The Expenses at Theaters

Answering a statement which appeared in THE FILM DAILY yesterday concerning the exhibitors viewpoint, following a mass meeting attended by exhibitors who represented half the membership of Moving Picture Machine Operators Local 366 and several members of the T. O. C. C., the operators' 10% wage reduction an official of Local 366 explained the operators' viewpoint as follows:

"According to a request of the Wage Scale Committee of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and thru various organizations to get together in a spirit of a thorough understanding and in the same breath offered the operators a 10% reduction.

Suit Over "Hate"

Action Brought to Hold Up Metro Film of That Name—One Released in 1917

An injunction suit over the film "Hate," just produced by Metro, Inc., and released by Associated, has been filed in the Supreme Court against Metro and Loew's, Inc., by the Fairmount Film Corp., which claims the right to the same name for a film.

The complaint alleges that Fairmount produced the film "Hate" in 1917 "as an elaborate film drama based on prevalent influence by J. W. Maysav, of Mexico, as Mexico is lead. It was shown in the Loew houses in the summer of 1917, and for several years had wide popularity. It alleged that the complaint states that George Conard, who filmed the picture was engaged last December to make certain changes in it, and by the title because it is damned to again sell the American rights. For that reason, it is alleged, he gave the title "Hate" to another film made from the story by Wadsworth Camp in Collier will damage the plaintiff's rights.

"Hate," produced by Fairmount in 1917 was sold on the state right market.

Repudiate Evans

Pennsylvania Committee Denies Any Opposition to Hoy—No Definite Stand Yet Taken

John S. Evans, national representative of the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, has been repudiated by the special committee of local exhibitor body in connection with Evans' stand on the Hoy Reporting Service.

Lewen Pizor, chairman of the special committee appointed in Philadelphia to confer with the Film Board of Trade, has written this office that the statement authorized by Evans early in July in which the latter attacked the Hoy Reporting Service, which works with the Film Board of Trade, was published "without the knowledge or approval of the committee."

Evans issued his statement at the time the suit of Edward G. Nixling against the Film Board of Trade was filed in Philadelphia. Pizor's letter repudiating Evans' statement, which is quoted in part, is as follows:

"In a recent issue of your publication appeared a news item to the effect that:

"The Motion Picture Theater Owners of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware through an appointed committee acting for the entire body of exhibitors have steadfastly refused to consider the application of the Hoy System with its rulings knowing that it is not fair and contrary to all rules of equity as well as against the laws of our commonwealth.

"This article was published without the knowledge or approval of the committee referred to by Mr. Evans. A committee representing the Motion Picture Theater Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, has been and is conducting negotiations with the Film Board of Trade to establish a working agreement between the two bodies that will provide for the adjustment of grievances and differences between them. No decision has been reached by the committee and no opinion authorized by it for publication."

Brownell Leaves Universal

John C. Brownell, for six years with Universal and for some time Eastern scenario editor, has resigned. It is understood Lee Deisrue will succeed him.

"Uncle Tom" Again

R-C to Make It—One Made in 1918 by Paramount and Another Reported in Production

One of the important bits of business that carries P. A. Powers West, is the launching of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which will be released as a special in the fall by the Film Booking Offices. The picture will be made on a lavish scale and with an all-star cast. As yet no director has been selected for it.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" has already been filmed by Paramount. J. Scarfe Dawley directed the feature in which Marguerite Clark was starred. A short time ago, the W. M. Smith Prod. of Tulsa, Okla., stated it would produce the picture in eight reels and that a company would be sent to the original locations to shoot the exteriors.

The same story was also filmed some years ago and is at present being shown in Connecticut.

Houston, Tex.—The board of censors has rejected eight pictures. They are "Don't Blame the Stock," a comedy; "Salvation Neil," "The Unconquered Woman," "World's Apart," "Who's to Blame," "Ashes of Hope," "Woman of No Importance," and "Fate."

Uneasy Over Deal

Some New England Exhibitors May Urge Another Probe of Black Situation

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Boston—There are some under-ground rumbles over the Black-Famous Players deal, whereby the Walter F. Van Dyke and others control chain of theaters conducted by Alfred S. and John A. Black. It is difficult to get anyone to talk. As nearly as the situation can be sized up it is this:

In some exhibiting circles there is apprehension lest Famous Players perfect a deal with other prominent theater circuits in New England, and in that way secure a strangle hold on the New England theater situation. Just what the basis of this conjecture is, is problematical. One report in circulation has it that Famous will take over two of the most important first-runs in town. Another report would indicate that several of the M. P. T. O. members here will ask Sydney S. Cohen to make another investigation of the New England situation.

It is understood that reports similar to the above have come to the attention of the Exhibitors' and Operators' officials, who, it is understood, are inclined to place little credence in them.

Arthur James Leaves M. P. World

Arthur James has resigned as editor of the Moving Picture World effective the end of this month. He will probably be succeeded by Robert E. Welch, former managing editor of the Motion Picture News.

Baum Closed Some Deals

Louis Baum, sales manager of Equity while abroad closed a number of deals for Equity. His company may handle an English-made picture which Baum looked at while abroad. Other American firms have been interested in buying some of the films but the bulk of them was not suited for American exhibition.

Effanem Starts

Ernest Hilliard and Effanem Shearer have been signed to appear in "When the Cows Come Home," the initial production of Effanem Film Co. This picture will be directed by John McGinty, with Shaddy Graham assisting, and Ray Freedon will be production manager. Robert Elliott and Gladys Leslie are the leads. The picture will be made in the E. K. Lincoln studios in Grantville.

Hollywood—Harry C. Raymaker is directing Pecoe Holmes in a comedy at the Fox studios.

Leatrice Joy is preparing to go to New Orleans for a visit lasting about 2 weeks.

Dick Jones has finished shooting "Homemade Movies," a new Mack Sennett-Bea Turpin comedy.

Norma Talmadge will be presented in "The Garden of Allah," when she finishes "The Voice from the Minaret."

Roy Del Ruth will direct the next Bevan-June comedy for Mack Sennett, "When Summer Comes."

Sol Polito will photograph "The Bishop of the Ozarks," which Fox is directing at the Fine Arts Studio.

Marion Fairfax has been engaged by Metro to write a story for Billie Dove. It will be "The Girl in the Gilded Cage."

John Bowes will appear in "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Arlene Pretty will appear in "Page Tom O'Brien."

William Abrahamson has left the local offices of Phil Goldstone Prod. to make an extensive tour in the interests of the Richard Talmadge and Franklin Farnum productions.

Beside supervising a large portion of the scenario department at Universal City, Raymond Schrock finds time to prepare continuity now and then. He wrote the scenario for "Conscience," which Herbert Rawlinson is starring in.

Jack Wagner has joined the Schenck forces at United as general assistant to Lou Anger. He replaces Al Worker, whom Anger transferred to the Buster Keaton unit as assistant director to Eddie Cline.

George Metford will be at Channel Islands the entire month, to make scenes for "Fbb-Tide," a Robert Louis Stevenson story. James Kirkwood, Tia Lee, George Fawcett, Raymond Hatton, Noah Beery and Jacqueline Logan will be seen in it.

Selznick is preparing to start two new productions at the United Studios within the next few days, coincident with the return of Myron Selznick from Los Angeles. George Archainbaud and Victor Heerman will direct.

In the Courts

An attachment for $500 has been granted in the Supreme Court against the property of Ward Lascelse in Los Angeles, in suit of Harry A. Richards for legal service in connection with "The Rip Van Winkle." The complaint alleges that Lascelse had a contract with the W. W. Hodkinson Corp. to produce Richard's play, and agreed to indemnify that company against any claim for infringement of copyright. Richards said a claim was made by W. W. Hodkinson Corp. to retain the infringing play in violation of the agreement of the Joseph Jefferson version, and Lascelse retained him to effect a settlement, as a result of which a sum was paid to Hadley and legal proceedings that might have caused Lascelse a loss of $3000, but has failed to do so. He says that Lascelse has a 60% interest in the gross receipts from the film and the attachment is levied against that.

Daisy C. Danziger has sued David P. Powell, producer of "The Man," for an assigned claim of Jake W. Danziger, owner of the film, "The Corsican Brothers," to recover $20,907 alleged to be due to the defendant for which money was collected from the foreign rights to the film for the past two years.

Supreme Court Justice Donnelly has appointed Robert L. Luce referee to determine whether the bids made for the lease of the Astor Theater when the present lease held by the Astor Theater, Inc., expires Nov. 1, are bona fide or are for the purpose of "jacking up" the present rent of less than $40,000. One of the bidders is the Selznick Company, which offers $75,000. The suit is brought by the present tenant against the Longacre Square Theater Co., to compel the owner to renew the present lease on reasonable terms.

Go After Rentals

"The fact is that living costs will not permit them to accept a reduction and it is to rental costs of film to which, in our opinion, the exhibitors should look for a solution of their much spoken of operating costs.
Fortunately the condition of the Local 366 treasury is such that we are prepared to meet the needs and await developments. The wage scale of the operators took no flights during the war period and since that time we have suffered one 5% curtailment.
This is positively as far as the operators intend to go, and there should be no doubt of this fact in the mind of anyone who attended yesterday's meeting in the Central. If, in the opinion of the exhibitors as stated in THE FILM DAILY, the operator is not a 'skilled' mechanic we are equally determined that he shall not become a 'killed' mechanic. That portion of the exhibitor statement to the effect that operators can be 'fired' in three hours is simply ridiculous. The work is both hard and confining. The idea of the distaste of the work may be gained from the fact that since the first of the year to date we have buried an average of one member each month whose death was directly caused by occupational disease contracted in the booth of local motion picture theaters."

And Again Keaton Takes the Honors!

Read what the Conservative New York Times and The Film Daily say of Buster Keaton in "The Cops."

Keaton the Feature

"It would take something a lot better than the feature photoplay at the Rivoli this week, to take the honors of the program away from Buster Keaton's new comedy, 'Cops.'

"You must see the comedy to learn of these things—and laugh. Ever since the early Keystone Age comedies have wound up with a police chase, but how many comic heroes have mixed themselves up with a police parade and then had the entire force after them? There's novelty in multiplication, as you will see at the Rivoli."

Keaton Rings the Bell

"Once more Buster Keaton rings the bell. His latest comedy, 'Cops' is just as funny as 'The Boat' and will bring down the house with laughter. The comedy gags roll out one after another and lead to a side splitting climax in which Buster is chased all over the lot by about 300 cops.

"Never have so many cops been assembled before in a short subject and in no comedy have the devices used to evade capture been so ingenious. And through all this Buster sails quickly and quietly; not once does his serious expression break and not once does he forestall a gag. As the reels unravel the laughs get closer together until at the finish it becomes all one long ripple. Such was the effect, when this comedy was shown to a Broadway audience on a hot, humid night.

"Buster Keaton is irresistible and you can make no mistake if you show him to your audience. His popularity has grown and is on the ascent. He is the chief attraction of many a program and threatens to remain so."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

It took David Schaefer, general manager of Rossayas Theatrical Enterprises of Brooklyn, at the Manhattan, a new testing ground for publicity idea, which got the money and helped to dispel the hot weather jinx. He selected an idea that was not the indifferent ways of the general ballyhoo men, dressed himself in a very picturesque costume of an Arabian Sheikh, hired a thoroughbred stallion from a riding academy, and mounted on same he raced at top speed through the leading streets of Jamaica, and Woodhaven. Flying banners announced the title, date and name of the the-treasure chest of stories with which was that Schaefer was arrested for racing and masquerading in the public highways, but the judiciary interfered furnished additional publicity.

Los Angeles—A newspaper contest to find the film that had publicity for Goldwyn was that engineered by J. A. Jackson, studio publicity manager for Goldwyn, with the Examiner. It was a search of stories, and not trusting the indifferent ways of the general ballyhoo men, dressed himself in a very picturesque costume of an Arabian Sheikh, hired a thoroughbred stallion from a riding academy, and mounted on same he raced at top speed through the leading streets of Jamaica, and Woodhaven. Flying banners announced the title, date and name of the the-treasure chest of stories with which was that Schaefer was arrested for racing and masquerading in the public highways, but the judiciary interfered furnished additional publicity.

Emporia, Kan.—A personal message from Norma Talmadge, star of "Smilin’ Through," was given a new angle as the picture played the Strand as the result of a keen exploitation campaign. The fifty word fire from the star to the mayor mentioned the fire truck mark by the Santa Fe Station of which every true Emporian is justly proud and incidentally brought in some word about "Smilin’ Through." The truck was as pleased as a twelve-year old with a lollipop. He got in touch with the local radio broadcasting station and had the message sent out to all Emporia. It was caught at every receiving station and then retransmitted on the air and now Norma Talmadge is in solid.

Dallas, Tex.—There is some feeling pro and con about the Ku Klux Klan here, and manager of the Hope took advantage of the fact to help exploit "One Clear Call." Five large, electrically illuminated advertising automar par-

Cohen Attacks Hoy
Denounces System—His Committee Confers with Will H. Hays in the Morning
Sydney S. Cohen yesterday attacked the Hoy Reporting Service and recommended M. P. T. O. to its operation. Cohen said his organization was squarely behind Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger who brought suit to test the legality of the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade which uses the Hoy system.

Yester-day and hoy Cohen, Nirdlinger, M. E. Comerford, John T. Collins, Ed M. Fay, M. J. O'Toole, John Mannheimer and C. E. Whitehurst of the M. P. T. O. conferred with Will H. Hays, Karl W. Kirchwey and Courtland Smith on uniform contracts. At the meeting, the opposition to Hoy and his service was explained to the M. P. T. O. members and the plan for arbitration as outlined in an adjoining column gone into.

Cohen in attacking Hoy stated: "In view of the developments of the past few weeks involving the suit of Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger of Philadelphia against the Film Board of Trade and other agencies using the so-called "Hoy" system the Motion Picture Owners of America are positively opposed to any blacklisting proposition of this character brought about through the efforts of a self-appointed board of judges, who assume to impose their dictum upon the exhibitor without any opportunity of appeal and, as an alternative to obeying their mandates, use the Hoy system, as a deterrent to the illegal practice of forcing a dark house upon the exhibitor by withholding film through improper processes."

"It is undeniable that any such line of conduct could be tolerated in any business which, because of its peculiar character, must have mutuality as one of its fundamental features. The Motion Picture Owners of America are firmly behind Mr. Nirdlinger in his actions. We stand for fair and square business dealings and honest arbitration with both sides properly represented."

Acuses the Aschers
E. A. Katz Charges Theater Chain Faces Bankruptcy Because of Mismanagement of Funds (Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Chicago—Eugene A. Katz charges mismanagement of asset funds, which, it is alleged, threaten bankruptcy to the chain of theaters operated by Ascher Brothers, Inc., in an affidavit filed in the Superior Court against the Cosmopolitan Securities Co., and Harry Max and Nathan Ascher, co-partners in the theater enterprise.

Katz asserts that he is owner of a one-third interest in the Cosmopolitan theater in Chicago and is a subsidiary of Ascher Brothers, Inc. The affidavit follows the admissions made by Max and Nathan Ascher in a hearing before Master in Chancery Sidney Pollack, in which it is developed that the affairs of the securities Co., and those of Ascher Brothers, Inc., had become so involved that both were on the verge of bankruptcy.

Washington—Congressman Joseph Walsh of Massachusetts, one of the industry’s best friends in Congress resigns this week to become a member of the Massachusetts Superior Court. Walsh introduced the bill which bars the transportation of obscene pictures through the mails and is the father of the film theft bill now in committee in the House.

Dec "About Closed"
First 1 Ional-Goldwyn Contracts Await signatures—All Obstacles Cleared Away
The contracts between First National and Goldwyn will be signed either today or Monday, unless some unexpected obstacle should intervene.

After many weeks of conferences in which lawyers for both companies have played the most prominent part, the contracts are understood to be drawn and ready for the necessary signatures.

A deal of such magnitude involved a long period of discussions. Two factors are said to have held up the deal. The final straightening out of Goldwyn’s interest in the Ascher Bros. chain of theaters and the disposal of Alfred Weiss’ ownership of the New York State exchanges are said to have been knotty problems which retarded the progress of the transaction.

From Chicago last year there came word of the filing of an affidavit by E. A. Katz against the Cosmopolitan Securities Co., and Harry Max and Nathan Ascher, of Ascher Bros., Inc. Katz charges mismanagement of funds. Whether this new twist will have any bearing on the closing of the deal remains to be seen.

"Lincoln" Film Ready
Earlier in the week at the National Arts Club, a picture called "The Spirit of Lincoln" was shown as the opening shot in a campaign to raise $1,000,000 for the Lincoln Memorial University at Harrington, Tenn. The film was made by H. E. Hollister of the Pyramid Film Co., Dayton, O., with funds supplied by Frederick Patterson, president of the National Cash Register Co.

The session at which they were present was presided over by Harry G. Koselt, Karl W. Reid, and W. O. S. Reider, both former presidents, during which a number of important matters were discussed. The question of arbitration was taken up in detail and it was decided to proceed with the necessary steps in order to have the arbitration proceed.

There will be a series of Film Boards of Trade in operation in all of the exchanges of the country. The arbitration boards of these various units will be maintained with an equal number of members and exhibiters. Just what the number will be has not been discussed. Settlement can be made in the exchange centers where there will be a regional board of appeal which will sit in New York and which will have an equal representation from distributors and exhibitors.

It is expected, however, that recourse to the board of appeal will be necessary. The belief is held that the local arbitration boards will be sufficient to handle the situations as they develop.

It is further understood that a new organization will be created. The plan as drafted has been submitted to him for his advice to the Hoy. It has been deemed necessary because one of the complaints made against the Hoy service is that it sets up jurisdiction through a self-appointed court without recourse to the regular legal channels.

When the National Association was fully operative and when the Hoy Reporting Service began to expand, the impression was conveyed that the important matters would be handled through the Hoy. That condition is not believed to exist. It is understood that only one major company has actually signed an agreement with Hoy and that so far as the others are concerned, Hoy has its promises and nothing else.

The stand of the distributors apparently means a clear cut victory for Sydney S. Cohen and the M. P. T. O. That organization at the Washington convention voted against the extension of the Hoy idea and has since urged its members not to cooperate with Hoy and its branches in any way. Chicago has voted against Hoy while rumblings from Baltimore and Cleveland yesterday heard New York.

Hoy was in Washington yesterday. At his office in the New York theater building, it was stated no word had been received from any of the national distributors regarding their change of plans in the matter. Hoy is expected back in New York to-day.

Patterson Given a Watch

William C. Patterson was presented with a gold watch by First National when he was in New York this week. He could not take his trip to the coast with the rest of the exhibitors who won in the anniversary week contest and so named another exhibitor in his place.

Cohen's interference with Will H. Hays on standard contracts. He wrote the following letter and asked it to be turned over to THE FILM DAILY by Sydney S. Cohen. The letter in full follows:

"While an adjournment was made of the injunction proceedings instituted in Cohen's action against Five by Mr. Love and Myself, the action was not dropped but continued and there is good faith of the film companies in not discriminating against my theaters in general and against the Amcasadador theater in particular; that I was not compelled in any manner, shape or form to assume any of the obligations of our predecessors nor any of the contracts arranged or negotiated by them, a large portion of which were invalidated and rushed through after settlement of the property that had taken place and which they were endeavoring to force me to pay.

"I did agree to play one of the pictures previously contracted for with the distinct understanding that the contract was to be made directly with me and that thereby no precedent was established obligating me in any way. There was no recognition of the Film Board of Trade nor the continued service of the Hoy, which I consider a menace to every theater owner and exhibitor in the United States and Canada, and which the Department of Justice must destroy."

Cohen Attacks Hoy

Evans No Longer Committeeman

Sydney S. Cohen in commenting on the stand of the Pennsylvania M. P. T. O. regarding the Hoy Reporting Service stated that John S. Evans who early in July said for that unit that the exhibitors were opposed to Hoy is no longer national committee-man from Eastern Pennsylvania. The special committee headed by Lewen Pizor repudiated Evans' statement and in view of Cohen's statement it would seem that Evans spoke as an individual and not as an official of the Eastern Pennsylvania unit.

Piedmont Oil Company by that Denny Harris of Pittsburgh had been elected national committee-man from Western Pennsylvania. The Eastern committee was temporarily without one.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Dallas, Tex.—William W. Hays, manager of the Grand, used a very attractive cut-out for you, which the day was simply called “Mrs. Jones’ Moving Boy Tonight.” He built a miniature stage, placed a cut-out of the mother of the picture in back of his prescussion opening. An old fashioned oil lamp was put in the window, the wick having been replaced by a small electric bulb. White carnations were used to tie the display up with Mothers Day. The cost of the display was only $4. Day or night, the whole job himself, including the lettering. A large turn-out resulted.

San Francisco—At the California, Roth and Saming enlisted the aid of the First National exploitation man in consummating their decision to put all their advertising resources behind a new subject. The big feature of the campaign was a concerted action by which all motorists on the avenue were stopped and told to back out for cops. They were handed a card reading: “If you violate a parking ordinance you are subject to a fine. Cops are nosing you more by seeing Buster Keaton etc.” It was good for a laugh and, used in conjunction with the convention to the International Police, then being held in San Francisco, had ready made co-operation.

Los Angeles—The Kinema in exploiting the title “Fools First,” played up the detective angle. Chief of Police Oaks was invited to a special showing with his entire staff, including all the members of the detective department. The criminologists, locally famous, gave their opinions on the pictures and the technical point of criminology involved in the detection and eventual reformation of the chief character of the story. These were printed in the local paper and formed the basis for extensive discussion by correspondence in the theme of the production. Equally effective were the services of a devil aviator who flew above holiday crowds, dropping 50,000 cards with a message about the Marshall Neilan film. Every hundred card was numbered and was a free admission to the Kinema, having been so advertised. The aviator’s flight was publicized as “Fools’ Stunts for Fools’ First” and the tie-up with the title caught the fancy of the crowd which cheered him to the echo when he made his final descent to safety.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The radio was used to help exploit Jackie Coogan in “Trouble,” at the Circle. A long picture show plug from Hollywood to the Circle had been expedited several days beforehand with the officials of the telephone company. The local radio station, being a station licensed to operate for the proper transmission of the message to the theater patrons. When the moment arrived the audience became a single unit, listening to “Mr. Jack” tell them of his fishing expedition, stated that he had caught an 18-inch bass but that his father had caught more fish, said he had just acquired a new dog and hoped that they all liked his new picture. The stunt had been advertised in advance so that every one in Indianapolis knew of it. That was the essential point of the exploitation. Many of the patrons came claiming that it was only another “dodge,” but when Jackie’s voice actually filtered over the broadcasting station they were agreeably surprised and at the conclusion of his message he applauded him heartily.

The cost was limited to the charge for the long distance telephone call for the special notice was included in the regular advertising done by the theater.

Cleveland, O.—J. L. McCurdy, manager of the Standard, is an opening. On Tuesday, a few weeks ago he read a newspaper account of the attempt of William E. Arliss, to beat the endurance record for piano playing in which the following remark appeared: “If I could only have the movies to watch and keep my mind in the game, I’d win.” Arnold said this as his twenty-fifth hour of continuous playing began.

McCurdy immediately began scouring Cleveland for a projector, rounded up an operator and landed at the store where the pictures were being held, with a print of “Outside the Law,” the only thing he could obtain at that time of night, two Century Comedies and the show he was playing that week at the Standard. He set up shop right in the middle of the city window of the Wurlitzer store and gave Arnold a show of his own. Several hundred interested spectators also enjoyed the performance which lasted from 1 a.m. to 8 a.m. There was a bulletin board in the window reading: “Courtesy of Standard Theater and Universal Film Exchange.”

Arnold broke the former record, 44 hours and 30 minutes by more than twice his, his new mark being 45 hours and 1 minute, and the Standard obtained much publicity meanwhile.

A Human Story, a Fine Production, and Excellent Acting

"HUMAN HEARTS"
Jewel-Universal

DIRECTOR ......................... King Baggot
AUTHOR ............................ Hal Reid
SCENARIO BY ...................... Lucien Hubbard
CAMERAMAN ...................... Victor Milner and Otto Dyar
AS A WHOLE.............. Heart interest drama that scores successful entertainment and should prove good box office attraction

STORY........... Wholesome and interesting; moves along in splendid succession of events and never drags.

DIRECTION ...... Gets the spectator's interest at the start and never loses it; very good all the way through

PHOTOGRAPHY .................... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ........................ Excellent
PLAYERS......... House Peters gives another of his very worth while performances; an exceptionally fine cast including Russell Simpson, Gertrude Claire, George Hackathorne, Edith Hallor and others

EXTERIORS ................. Very pretty
INTERIORS ......................... Good
DETAIL .......................... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Son of countryman marries city girl against father's wishes and later serves a prison term for the murder of his father whom he believes his wife murdered

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............. 6,350 feet

There have been a number of pictures similar in theme to "Human Hearts" but in this instance the production is not going to suffer because of being like so many others. It is just strong enough and different to hold its own and satisfy the desires of those who like wholesome dramatic entertainment.

The story is by Hal Reid and has served as a popular stage play in the past. It provides an entirely suitable and worth while vehicle for the screen and with the fully satisfying production accorded it by King Baggot, has every chance of being a real box office number, the feature of greatest importance to the exhibitor. The atmosphere of the small town with its typical townsmen and associate characteristics is remarkably well represented, not only generally, but in numerous individual touches that really stand out prominently. There is the blacksmith shop, the typical town cronies and events in the life of the village such as the annual picnic with its greased pig contest. These are only a few of the touches that makes the picture seem to live, gives it an atmosphere of realism.

The situations are not what you would probably call strictly original but they have been skilfully handled and so well acted that they become distinctive. The director leads up to the dramatic climaxes with a surety and increasing interest without forcing it and throughout he touches it off with a mother love that is obvious though never dominating. Lastly, he has assembled a cast that is capable and well suited to the most unimportant member.

House Peters' performance in "Human Hearts" is worthy of stellar prominence. His playing is careful and yet natural and he seems to have an unfailing ability to make himself fit in with surroundings. He'll gain more admirers with this. Gertrude Claire, as the mother, gives the next most impressive performance while Edith Hallor, George Hackathorne and Russell Simpson are equally capable and dependable.

Story: Logan, a farmer, cuts off his son, Tom, when the latter marries what his father calls a scheming city woman, Barbara Kay. Tom and Barbara are happy with their babe until the wife begins to long for the city. An old admirer kills Tom's father when he interferes with an elopement plan. Tom, thinking Barbara committed the murder, assumes the guilt and goes to jail. Barbara joins her lover but finally confesses. Tom is released and they go back home to Tom's mother.

A Good Entertainment But It's Up To You To Put It Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You know pretty well by now how your folks take to heart interest stories such as that contained in "Human Hearts," and just about what the picture can do for you. Where they like clean, wholesome dramatic entertainment you should be able to make a profitable return through the exhibiting of this feature. It will bear any promises you care to make for it in the way of good production, fine acting, and a worth while story.

It would probably interest the "fan" crowd to know that the author is the father of Wallace Reid. Play up House Peters' name and tell them not to miss his performance in "Human Hearts." It is worth the price of admission. The title is a good one and will go well with catchlines and whatever exploitation you can give it. A trailer will arouse their interest and stills in the lobby will be enough to let them know the picture is good to look at.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........5,111 feet

Director John S. Robertson has provided such a splendid production for "The Spanish Jade," from the play by Louis Joseph Vance and the novel by Maurice Hewlett, that it is unfortunate he did not have better story material to work with. It is a fairly interesting dramatic romance that is sufficiently original and strong in situations at first but when the story is about half told, it drifts into an uninteresting and unconvincing vendetta theme that drags it to a more or less monotonous

Will Satisfy Unless They Object to Dragging of Story Toward Close

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Delightful Spanish atmosphere and locations that give it a first rate pictorial appeal are your best talking points in connection with "The Spanish Jade." Be sure to let them know that Director Robertson took his company abroad to make the picture. It should interest them to know that the film was made in the country where the story is supposed to take place.

David Powell's name is well enough known to warrant using and if you number any of his admirers among your patrons, tell them they will like him as Gil Perez, a Spanish wanderer, who was in love with a girl but did not know she loved him. Catchlines will give a good idea of the story and the title is sufficiently atttractive to boost. Your only objectors are likely to be those who want snappy, fast action stories and pictures with little drama or romance. You can safely make promises for the production and play up pictorial values.

The Marion Fairfax Production

The LYING TRUTH

With an all-star cast including

NOAH BEERY - MARJORIE DAW - PAT O’MALLEY - TULLY MARSHALL

Written and directed by MARION FAIRFAX

Johnston’s Motion Picture News praised it for box-office power and human interest. Moving Picture World rated it as sure-fire entertainment. Harrison says it has good audience values and that all kinds of audiences will like it.

Film Daily says, "You will certainly do business with this one;" Exhibitors Trade Review says, "Nobody can fail to like it" and Exhibitors Herald says, "Marion Fairfax left out nothing that audiences like on the screen."
See the critic's review in The Film Daily, dated July 9th, which says: "JAN OF THE BIG SNOWS" is a good bit different from most of Curwood's stories and contains no wasted footage on unessential details. You can be certain of pleasing audiences with 'JAN.'

James Oliver Curwood's
Drama of the Hudson Bay Country

JAN OF THE BIG SNOWS
Directed by Charles M. Seay

There's a strong, elemental force in this human Curwood story of a woman—the only woman at a fur traders' post—protected by the code of the Far North against a designing agent from civilization. It is a story of honor, love and loyalty.

The other trade journal critics have been just as vigorous in their approval. "A picture that will please nine out of every ten picture fans," says Motion Picture News. "It will satisfy all who like strong outdoor subjects; among Curwood's best," says Exhibitors Herald.

DETAIL ......................... Satisfactory
CHARACTER OF STORY....... Nun takes sister’s place and goes to jail for her. Contrast of cabaret and convent life
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 5,600 feet
"The Worldly Madonna" has lots of good acting, strong drama, contrast and all the other elements that go to make an appealing production, but the story fails to convince and the star gains little sympathy for herself.

Clara Kimball Young plays a dual role. In the first part of the production she takes the part of a cabaret dancer and drug fiend. Then to avoid imprisonment she changes places with her sister, a nun.
When the man, whom she thought she killed, recovers
she leaves the convent and allows her sister to return to the veil. Such a character as this can gain very little sympathy from an average audience.
The character of the self sacrificing nun, who is the real heroine is also a little unconvincing. It is questionable whether a nun would impersonate her sister so far as to appear in cabaret for her. This is stretching it a bit too far. In the end of the story the guilty sister repents and marries her lover, but there is nothing to show that she freed herself of the drug habit.

Two shootings occur in the opening scenes and you are led to believe that both men are killed. The situations that follow depend upon this, but in the end you find that both men have recovered and because of this none is guilty. Another weak point in the story is the amount of deception employed. The girl pretends that she is a nun while her sister, the real nun, deceives all into believing that she is the dancer.
The hero believes that the nun is his sweetheart and so does the villain.

The good work that the star does in this complicated dual role is entirely overshadowed by the weakness in the story. Director Garson has done as well as could be expected with this material. He has allowed the star a good deal of play, but has failed to place her in a sympathetic light. The photography and supporting cast are good.

Story: Lucy, a dancer, shoots her lover in a quarrel and escapes to the convent where her sister is a nun.
Here she changes clothes with her sister Janet and plays the part of a nun while Janet returns to town and goes to prison for the shooting. The nun recovers and Lucy is welcomed back to the cabaret where she is forced to sing. Then both appear to save the lover; and all is explained.

The Star’s Name Is Your Best Drawing Card

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It all depends upon how well Clara Kimball Young stands with your patrons. If she is popular in your vicinity then you can safely run this one. Her admirers will be glad to see her regardless of the story.
You can safely promise some good acting but do not say very much about the story or they may be disappointed.

Mention the cabaret scenes and the convent shots but it might be well to cut out the scenes showing the star smoking in the convent. They are likely to offend those of Catholic faith. Mention some of the star’s former releases if you have played them and use the posters and stills. The use of a trailer and slides may help attract.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Young wife separated from husband in gold rush. Falls victim of circumstances but defends herself by taking the identity of a dead companion
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......5,000 feet

The "Belle of Alaska" is a satisfying entertainment dealing with the gold rush in Alaska. The scenes are laid in Seattle and Nome in about the year 1899.
The story deals mainly with the adventures and experiences of a deserted farmer's wife who attempts to join her husband in Alaska. This role is taken by Jane Novak who does some nice bits of acting and carries the burden of the production.

Director Bennett has achieved some good effects and helped intensify the drama in its many situations.
In some places he has allowed a little overacting and has given too much importance to minor details. As a whole he has obtained an interesting and entertaining offering built with familiar material.

The story is a little rambling and events seem to "just happen" as they do in real life. There is little foreshadowing and no accumulation but it holds the attention just the same and deals with a picturesque and dramatic period of American life.

There is but one episode in the entire production that might raise a question in the minds of the audience. This is after the girl shoots the bully in self-defense and becomes a fugitive from justice. There seems to be no need for her to run away from such kind of law breaking, yet much of the story depends upon this unconvincing point.

In the cast J. Frank Glendon and Noah Beery support the star with some good work to their credit.
Florence Carpenter and Leslie Bates add a needed contrast of strong and well done character parts.

Story: A farmer and his wife, Ruth, sell their home and set out for Alaska. They are separated in Seattle where Ruth gets a job in a lunch room. She shoots a man in self defence and flees to Alaska. The ship is wrecked before it reaches its destination but Ruth is rescued by a passing steamer. She takes advantage of the disaster to assume the identity of her companion who was known as "Chicago Belle" and who was on her way to a dance hall in Nome. Ruth gives birth to a baby and avoids the dance hall until one of the rich miners wagers that he will make her dance. He turns out to be her lost husband but money and life in Alaska has worked a decided change in him. The former owner of the Seattle lunch room arrives, and fights the evil husband and wins the girl.

Use the Star's Name and Play Up the Alaska Theme

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Mention Jane Novak in your advertisements for she has many admirers and a steadily increasing following.
Also play up the Alaska idea in the story for this period of American life is romantic and always attractive. You can promise some good acting and plenty of dramatic situations.

Give them an idea of what the story is about and tell them that it is a chapter of a girl's life during the gold rush. Shovels, picks and money bags hung about the lobby will attract attention and lend atmosphere to the offering. Stills of some of the climax scenes and a trailer run a week before will also help attract. A catchline might read: "The Belle of Alaska was not the kind of a girl that they thought she would be before she arrived."

Character of Story ....... Egyptian mystic leads American dancer to desert claiming she is reincarnated spirit of ancient queen and that a treasure awaits her in a secret tomb in the desert.

Length of Production ....... 5,450 feet

It is possible that Betty Compson’s personally produced production “Always the Woman” will satisfy those who like unusual settings, fantastic atmosphere and reincarnation themes, but they will have to accept all this without getting a very definite idea of their relation to each other because the offering is generally quite incomprehensible. The story is not sufficiently well put together for the spectator to grasp it readily and clearly. He can get a fair idea of what it is all about but not enough to satisfy him if he wants to sit back and thoroughly enjoy it.

Arthur Rosson has provided a fairly spectacular production and there are numerous attractive settings that are excellently lighted and splendidly photographed. Those representing the interior of the temple are interesting and some pretty desert locations with a few beautiful night shots are the best of the exteriors. It would seem that the director has given too much attention to artistic detail and not enough to story development. One reason for the story’s failure to be clear is the lack of a definite premise at the start. The characters are introduced, one after the other, without enough explanation as to their relations in the play. Those who have no trouble in placing the characters right off will not find it difficult to follow the rest of the story, but if they miss out at the start, the remainder of the picture is bound to be a bit vague.

The Egyptian sequence in the latter reels bears a resemblance to the recent Sheik pictures and contains a certain amount of audience appeal that can undoubtedly be relied upon to please them. Betty Compson gives a good performance and in the scenes where the Egyptian mystic tries to persuade her into believing that she is a reincarnated spirit of his ancient queen, she offers some good humorous touches and the subtitles bring a few laughs. Emory Johnson is suitable as the hero while Macey Harlam glories in the role of the Egyptian statesman.

Story: Celia Thaxter, a dancer en route to the Orient, is told by a mystic on board the ship that she is the reincarnated spirit of an ancient Egyptian queen and that a great treasure, hidden in the desert, awaits her coming. Khalim Pasha, an Egyptian statesman, also on board, desires the dancer and plans to win her through his lackey, Stanhope, who proposes to Celia. Meantime Celia has fallen in love with Boone, an American, whose wife is in love with Pasha. How Pasha’s plans are spoiled and Celia marries Boone, remains to be told.

Star’s Name and Desert Atmosphere Can Be Played Up

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors will have to decide for themselves whether or not they can show “Always the Woman” and satisfy their patrons because it depends upon just what your particular clientele wants. If they like romance and don’t mind it being fairly improbable, they will accept the Betty Compson feature. Or if you happen to know they are interested in the theory of reincarnation you can undoubtedly bring them in by playing up this angle of the story.

Where the star is a favorite it may go very well. If you have played any recent Sheik pictures and did good business, it might be well to let them know there is desert atmosphere in this. Stills should bear you out and use pictures of the Egyptian characters. Catchlines relative to the chorus girl who was once Egypt’s queen might attract attention.

Nanook of the North

A Story of Life and Love in the Actual Arctic

Produced by Robert J. Flaherty, F.R.G.S.

"Beside this film the usual photoplay, the so-called 'dramatic work' of the screen, becomes as thin and blank as the celluloid on which it is printed."

New York Times
Nanook of the North

A whirlwind of applause at every performance at The Capitol: positive enthusiasm from the New York papers!

"Beside this film the usual photoplay...becomes as thin and blank as the celluloid on which it is printed...It is real...Its people not acting but living...Nanook is a genuine hero, one who is watched with alert interest and suspense and far-reaching imagination...There is body as well as dramatic vitality to Nanook's story...It is far more interesting, far more compelling purely as entertainment than any except the rare exceptions among photoplays. No matter how intelligent a spectator may be...he can enjoy 'Nanook of the North.'"—N. Y. Times, June 12, 1922.

"There is a powerful thematic feeling running through the picture, ending with inspired appropriateness with scenes of dogs howling in the bleak wilderness as the storm comes on, then dropping off to sleep too tired to do anything but freeze...Fascinating."—N. Y. Herald, June 12, 1922.

"Far more interesting than most of the features we have seen lately."—N. Y. Tribune, June 12, 1922.

"'Nanook of the North' at the Capitol is a surprise picture.... The surprise comes in the amazing beauty and dramatic texture of this simple story....It's wonderful!"—N. Y. World, June 12, 1922.

"Talk about atmosphere in photodrama! There is more atmosphere to the cubic centimeter around 'Nanook of the North' than was ever compressed into the same space in the previous history of the screen! Far and away the best thing of the kind that has been done....Nanook is a real superman....The picture generates more thrills than a serial, provokes more genuine mirth than a slapstick comedy....From introduction to finale, 'Nanook of the North' is there!"—N. Y. American, June 12, 1922.

For the first time in the history of the New York Capitol the Monday's receipts exceeded Sunday's!
One More Northwest Mounted to Add to the List

Charles Jones in
"TROOPER O'NEILL"

Fox

DIRECTOR ........ C. R. Wallace and Scott Dunlap
AUTHOR ................ George Goodchild
SCENARIO BY .......... William K. Howard
CAMERAMAN ............. Lucien Andriot

AS A WHOLE—Conventional Northwest Mounted picture that contains fair action but nothing that is new

STORY.......The same old situation involving love and duty; has one or two slight surprise twists

DIRECTION ......... Adequate but couldn't do very much with trite material; production is suitable

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Good
LIGHTINGS ......................... All right
STAR.............Well suited and will please admirers SUPPORT.....Beatrice Burnham a pleasing heroine; nearly everyone overacts at times

EXTERIORS ....................... Pretty
INTERIORS ........................ Appropriate
DETAIL .................. Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY.......Mounted officer, in love with girl he is forced to arrest, finally learns she is not guilty of the murder

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,862 feet

The only difference between the latest Northwest Mounted picture, "Trooper O'Neill," and most of the others, is the absence of snow. It happens to be summer in the North during the action of this story but everything else runs true to the formula, making Charles Jones' latest release only an average entertainment because it is so very familiar and contains such trite situations.

The Mounted Police offer is certainly working overtime on the screen of late, and the disappointing feature of it is that no one seems to get a new angle on it. It is the same old struggle between love and duty.

Hero falls in love with a girl whom he believes is guilty of murder and he must sacrifice love for duty by arresting her. But that isn't all. There has to be a happy ending, and a deathbed confession clears the girl's name once more.

There are one or two good bits of action, one at the start when the hero-officer battles with his victim on the precipice and continues the fight when they fall into the rapids below, and then again when he plans to trap another murderer by a ruse. On the other hand the picture does not offer as much excitement as the usual run of Charles Jones' western features.

The directors have probably done as well as they could with the story and it will prove thoroughly pleasing except in theaters where they have already had their share of similar stories. One very faulty bit of detail that the directors have overlooked entirely in the costuming of players. From all appearances it is summer in the Northwoods. The heroine wears summer frocks and in one scene picks up a bouquet, but throughout the entire picture the men wear fur or knitted caps and heavy jackets.

Jones does his usual good work and Beatrice Burnham is a pleasing leading lady who photographs very well. The supporting cast is adequate but most of them overact. They are Francis McDonald, Claude Payton, Sidney Jordan, Jack Rollins and Karl Formis.

Story: Trooper O'Neil is sent to bring in the murderer of Jacob Dell. He goes to the Saskatchewann country and poses as a trapper, meets Marie and falls in love with her. O'Neil has reason to believe that her brother, Paul, or Pierre, a suitor of Marie's sister Celeste, who died because Dell had refused to marry her, killed Dell for revenge. O'Neil reasons, from marks of shots fired, that the slayer bears a wound in his right side. O'Neil is forced to accuse Marie but Pierre's dying confession clears her name and the two are happy.

Will Do Unless Your Folks Are Tired of a Too Often Repeated Theme

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is possible that you can satisfy your folks with Charles Jones' latest feature, but only in case you have not played many of the recent Northwest Mounted pictures. There have been so many of them that your folks are bound to tire of so much of the same thing. If the star has a loyal following you won't have to worry because they will likely be pleased with "Trooper O'Neil."

The line "a tale of love and duty in the Northwest," will be all you need to let them know what to expect, and of course the title readily suggests a story of the Canadian Royal Mounted Police. Display some stills in the lobby showing Jones with his new leading lady and tell them they will like the romance contained in "Trooper O'Neil."
Will Satisfy If They Like Regeneration Themes or the Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Crook stories and regeneration themes always seem to find an audience so you can probably satisfy your folks with “If You Believe It, It’s So,” Thomas Meighan’s latest release. You can tell them it is both amusing and dramatic and so reach them all. Those who want to be amused will be satisfied with the comedy it contains, and those who prefer something more serious should be pleased with the regeneration sequence.

Play up the star’s name and you can use the names of several in the cast such as Pauline Starke and Charles Ogle, as well as Joseph Dowling, who will be remembered as having appeared with Meighan in “The Miracle Man.” Your usual line of exploitation should be adequate for this offering. You will only have to mention the star’s name to bring his admirers in.
Heart Interest and Mother Love Make For Good Audience Appeal

INTERIORS ................. Fair
DETAIL ....................... Sufficient

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Police officer shoots his own son in performance of duty; another son, a lawyer, proves his brother's innocence

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 6,217 feet

"In the Name of the Law" tells a satisfying heart interest story that touches on the mother love theme in its depiction of the conflict between love and duty as found in the life of an officer of the law. Those who favor this particular type of screen offering will be adequately pleased with the Emory Johnson production inasmuch as it blends the elements that make for human interest appeal, in a satisfying maner without becoming too tense or dragging too harshly upon the heart strings. It gains a proper sympathy without being gushy or making a strikingly obvious play for sympathy.

As a whole, the material contains a main situation that, while not entirely original, offers the picture goer something that is not used frequently and at the same time pertains to every day life. It brings him the ever appealing love of a mother for her child and shows the extremes to which she will go to protect her own.
Then there is a touch of brother love in the character of the hero who assumes the guilt of a theft which he believes was committed by his sister, who, in turn, he thought was stealing to save another brother.

Johnson, for the most part, tells his story in an unminced fashion and production values generally are up to standard. Some of the interiors are a bit off, particularly those representing the rooms of the policeman's cottage. At times, detail also is a bit stressed through too many close-ups and shots that are held longer than they should be. The director handles the sequence in which the officer shoots his son, capably and the trial scene is well handled. He has selected a good company to fill the various roles.

Ralph Lewis, a dependable performer, is the police officer; Johnnie Walker is a well suited hero and Ella Hall is satisfying as the heroine. Claire McDowell makes a sympathetic and understanding mother. Juvenile players in the short prologue also do good work.

Story: Mrs. O'Hara strives to give her eldest son, Harry, an education while her husband, Patrick, an officer of the law, works to pay for their little home.
Harry is accused of a theft he did not commit and his mother draws the money from her husband’s savings to aid her son. Mary, an adopted daughter, also seeks to obtain the money as a loan from her employer. How Mary and Johnny, another brother, become involved in the robbery of the bank, and Harry, who has cleared himself, wins his brother's acquittal, is told in the re-

Will Go Very Well Where They Like Sentimental Subjects

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is quite likely that "In the Name of the Law" will prove a first rate box office attraction. It has a good title and a theme with a more or less general appeal, both of which can be effectively exploited. A proper exploitation, on the whole, will have considerable to do with putting the film over. It offers plenty of possibilities that will put it over for you if you take advantage of them.

The cooperation of your local police force would be one sure means of advertising it and one of the best boosters you could ask for. Johnnie Walker and Ella Hall should be known to your patrons and if your folks saw Ralph Lewis in "The Conquering Power," as the miser, it isn't likely they have forgotten his good work.
Post the title of the picture widely and well in advance of the showing. Promise heart interest and a good mother love theme.

"Perils of the Yukon"—Universal

Type of production..................................15 chapter serial

Alaska during the gold rush days is the setting for Universal's latest chapter play. The opening episode contains some historical shots which are interesting in themselves, but have little or nothing to do with the general theme of the story. For the sum of $7,200,000 Alaska was bought from Russia in 1867. The American flag was first raised on this territory in the town of Sitka which at that time was nothing but a Russian settlement. It is here that the daughter of a Russian trader falls in love with the American hero. Intrigue follows which results in the lovers being separated on the eve of their wedding. The girl is later forced to marry a Russian adventurer while the young man returns to San Francisco. Thirty years later the son of the man who goes to Alaska and falls in love with the daughter of his father's sweetheart. The Alaskan Indians provide a good deal of the action by capturing the hero and building a fire in which to roast him. He is saved by the daughter of the chief and to prevent recapture he is forced to dive off a large cliff. The story calls for snow scenes, dog sleds and the romantic life of Alaska in the gold days. A gold claim and scheming bad men help out the plot. Laura La Plante and William Desmond take the leading roles and accomplish some good serial work. The production was directed by Perry Vekroff and Jay Marchant from a story by George Morgan. The photography is good and is credited to William Lynch.

Like most serials the story is very disjointed and jumps from one situation to another, the object being to get as much action as possible. Many plots are introduced and discarded as soon as their action is exhausted. The serial as a whole is up to Universal's standard and former productions should be your guide. The snow scenes are cool to look at during the hot weather and can be used in exploitation. Also use the name of the star, William Desmond, and mention Laura La Plante.

"The Fable of Brewing Trouble"—Aesop's Fables—Pathe

Type of production...............................1 reel animated cartoon

The cat and the mouse have a little tussle in the first part of the cartoon. The mouse is too quick for the cat and hides in the farmer's still. The cat also gets a taste of the home brew with the result that all are happy. Then the farmer tries the stuff on his animals and the results are comical. The animation of this number of Aesop's Fables is well up to the standard of the series and will bring the usual number of laughs when shown.

"The Yellow Face"—Sherlock Holmes—Educational

Type of production...............................2 reel drama

"The Yellow Face" is another of the Sherlock Holmes mystery dramas. The story holds the attention to the very end. As usual the acting is good and the production as a whole entertaining. No time is lost in getting under way. A certain Mr. Munro calls upon Holmes and engages his help in solving the mystery which is closely connected with his wife and her relation to the house opposite. A yellow face appears in the window. In the end the yellow face is discovered to be a mask worn by a child who is the son of the woman by her first marriage. Fearing that her second husband would dislike her if he knew that she had had a child, she managed to keep his identity a secret. All ends well. The mask was used to hide the child. This number is well up to the standard of the series and will hold the attention of almost any audience.

"Apartment Wanted"—Century—Universal

Type of production...............................2 reel comedy

Lee Moran is the chief fun maker in this latest Century offering. The comedy business centers around the difficulties that a family man has in securing an apartment. Lee manages to find plenty of apartments but none would take children. At last he gets a janitor's job so that he can make some of the tenants move. He tries to frighten them out with a mouse but his wife does not like the apartment. He then creates a lot of smoke and calls "fire." This brings them a good sized apartment but also lands them all in jail. The jail is fitted up with the latest improvements and they are just about beginning to enjoy their home when the horrid jailor appears and informs them that their time is up and they will have to get out. Most of the comedy business has been done before in exactly the same manner. The gags have been done so often that they have almost lost their laugh. As a whole this number of the Century Comedies is but a mild entertainment.

"The Story of the Magnet"—Urban Popular Classics

Type of production...............................1 reel scientific

Here is an amusing and instructive scientific reel made by Professor F. B. Smith, of London. The subject this time is the magnet and the variety of experiments that can be performed with this simple device. Faraday's historical experiment proving that an electric current tends to revolve around a magnetic pole is demonstrated. Magnetic lines of force are shown by sprinkling iron filing on a card resting upon a magnet. How an electric magnet is made, and some novel experiments with a rotating magnetic pivot, are shown in an entertaining manner. With the present vogue of wireless and the popularity of all electrical subjects, this little reel will make a very desirable program filler. It holds the attention and is at the same time amusing.

"Treasure Bound"—Jack White—Educational

Type of production...............................2 reel comedy

Here is one of the most amusing comedies Jack White has ever done. It is full of laughs and has some very unique comedy business. It moves along quite smoothly and loses no time between gags. Most of the fun comes from an invention of a non-explosive gas. The inventor fills the comedian's mattress with the gas and the sleeping man is carried up and out of the window. At a colored men's spiritualistic meeting the windows are thrown open and as the leader calls, "Brother Alexander, let de spirits enter," the floating mattress sails into the room. The second part of the comedy deals with the search for a missing treasure. The airship that is treasure-bound engages in duck shooting and a little fishing while on its way. But a rival party has copied the map and also set out in search for the gold. The situations that follow are amusing and laughable. The comedy as a whole is well done and should entertain any class of audience.

The Bathing Girl Special Five Acts of Furious Fun

IT'S A WOW!

It's got the zip of the mountains, the tang of the seashore.

Speed? That's its keynote. The zoom of airplanes, the roar of racing boats.

And such a romance, such a story, such comedy—and such girls.

The cast:—Joe Moore, Louise Lorraine, Robert Anderson, Laura La Vernie and oceans of girls.

Story and direction by William Watson.

All about a society girl engaged to a fine healthy sap. She runs away to the country and falls for an honest boyish smile. Enter the fond mother. Discovered. Daughter is rushed to the seashore. The boy gets there, too. Big play for daughter's hand.

The boy pulls a Young Lochinvar. Into the wedding—out with the girl—into a blimp.

Zowie! Some climax.

And what you can do with this one by exploitatio

It is made to order to solve your summer worries

Kipling said it: "East is East and West is West, and never the twain shall meet." And that is certainly true. Of European production, as against America.

Ben Blumenthal expresses it like this: "They have their own ideas over here. And they think they are right. They think the American idea is wrong. Until they have been proven wrong by the success of American pictures in Central Europe, they will continue their way."

Which. In a nutshell. Is about right. Modern pictures, as made in, and liked by Americans, are foreign to producers in Central Europe. That is the whole story. In a nutshell.

FEW AMONG MANY

There are today, in Central Europe. Notably Berlin. Probably 40 to 50 big productions being made. But a trifling percentage of them are good for the American market. The reason: That the producer has given no consideration, in the making. To what America wants. Or likes. In Vienna. At the Sacha plant. I saw them finishing "Sodom and Gomorrah." Based on the Biblical legend. It has taken eight months to do it. At a cost of about $80,000. You need a Burroughs to add it up. In Austrian crowns. Which are about 14,000 to the dollar. At this writing. The sets are marvelous. One is tremendous. It has been sold to France. And Wertheimer has it for England. "Peter the Great." In which Jannings appears. Negri is doing a costume play. Of the period of the 16th century. When completed she sails for America. And it will be a long time before she returns to Berlin. She is picking up English now. And speaks a few words. Lubitsch has acquired a large assortment of American phrases. Which he will demonstrate when he arrives. About next Christmas.

EMERSONS BUSY

John Emerson and his clever wife—Anita Loos—are busy working. In Vienna. Where it is so quiet. They get a real chance. John says they have almost finished another. For Conny Talmadge. The Emersons return in September. Or later. And on his return John says. He will get busy again. Seeking a real tariff. On German made pictures. He has a lot more arguments than he had before. "Insists pictures can be made here. By American producers. At a much lower cost. Than in America. And every picture made here. Blocks some American-made picture. Very emphatic is John. Very. Of course John doesn’t look. At the other side. Which is— that if America shuts out foreign pictures. Foreign nations will retaliate. With a tariff. Against American pictures. And it is a fact. That they like American pictures here. As much. If not more. Than the home product. One Viennese girl said. "We all loafe Sharley Shaplin vair mooch. And Pearl Vite-she is nicht schoen. Oh, saer schoen." Meaning Pearl is very beautiful.

More F. P. Exchanges

Four Planned—Move Designed to Give Small Town Exhibitors Better Distributing Service

Famous Players has made plans to open at least four new exchanges in this country. These will be located in Portland, Ore.; Sioux Falls, S. D.; and Butte, Mont. One exchange in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., is now being made ready and will shortly start operation. The company is taking this step in order to give small-town exhibitors the service the theater man in the larger cities enjoys. It is figured that with new exchanges located at strategic points in the territory, there will be fewer instances of shows failing to arrive in time.

Nat Wolf Here from Dallas

Nat Wolf, former Educational manager at Dallas, is at the F. G. Flanders. He has just arrived from the South.

Banks in New Federated Series

Ben Wilson has wired Federated that the star to appear in one of the series to be made by him is Monty Banks, who previously appeared in two Federated series.

F. B. O. Will Open in Salt Lake

A new Film Booking Office of American exchange will be opened at Salt Lake City on Sept. 1st. Emil C. Jansen, western division manager, will make arrangements for the opening.

F. P. L Exploitation 3 Years Old

Famous Players-Lasky is celebrating the third birthday of its exploitation department, founded July 10, 1919. Originally, the staff consisted of eight but has been increased and in addition, each branch office has its own exploitation man.

Va. Exhibitors to Show Slides (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Ocean View, Va.—The Paramount Publicity Corp., of New York, has agreed to pay the annual dues of $25 of each participating exhibitor. The Virginia, under an agreement whereby the exhibitors will show slides supplied by Paramount at every show.

Buy “Othello”

L. Auerbach, on behalf of The Export & Import Film Co., and David P. Howells have just closed a contract whereby they have jointly bought the American and Canadian rights of “Othello,” featuring Emil Jannings.

EUROPEAN THEATERS

Usually small. No Capitols. Nor Roosevelts. Nor Rialtos. Rarely see a 1,000 seat house. In either Germany, Austria, or wherever you go. In this neighborhood. In Buda Pest and the surrounding country. There are about 400 houses. Seating on an average about 700. Finest the Kamara. In Buda Pest. A little gem of a place. With a wonderful ceiling which slides apart. And lets in the air. And moonlight. When it's too warm. Owned by the same firm which controls Starfilm. Which has a delightful little studio. Near Buda Pest. Very complete. Have shown about 64 features and 20 comedies. None ever reached America. Some beautiful girls in Buda Pest. One being tested out now. For American productions. Name: a secret. But she's a peach for looks.

In Vienna the best house is the Oes which has about 900 seats and does a nice business. Even in these tough days. In Berlin there are quite a few good, big houses. The Ufa Palace; The Union; The Tauentzien Palace and the Marmor House. Also the Alhambra and the Primus Palace, and several others.

AL KAUFMAN POPULAR

Al has charge of Famous production in Berlin. But that hasn't stopped him from being very clever. They have named a schmucklach after him and also a cocktail. The latter is just plain Bacardi. But the name makes it popular.

SOME EXPERIENCES

Enough to fill a book. Enjoyed—if that's the word—by Abe Carlos, of the Fox organization. Who will be home in August. After about 20 months in Europe. Had charge of production of “Nero” and “The Shepherd King.” If Carlos wants to write his experiences in full they will make a great hit. He had some great times. To prove that picture making in foreign countries. By Americans. Isn’t a joke.

In Rome, when making “Nero” all the papers took a wallop. At the Fox organization. And getting started wasn’t easy. They wanted “Nero” to be left for an Italian producer. When they wanted 10,000 extras. For the Circus Maximus spectacle. Carlos could not get the Circus Internationale—where it was staged—until he lifted the mortgage on the property. Which, unfortunately wasn’t much. In dollars. Then all the supers weren’t wanted to wear straw hats. To protect them from the sun. As there were no straw hats in Nero’s days you can imagine his difficulties. Finally he offered five lira for each hat checked. That made it easy. But the owners didn’t care whether or not they found their own. In the thousands checked. They could buy new ones for less. At noon the extras quit cold. Nothing could induce them to work further. They had made 10 bras and even the inducement of an extra 10 for another hour meant nothing to them. They would return after they had spent what they had earned.

To get the lion episodes Carlos took his principal to Cologne, Germany. Where a troupe of trained lions was available. The military authorities didn’t like the idea and stopped it. Finally, in a little summer park outside the city Carlos arranged the shooting. And then one of the lions escaped, dashed through the city and frightened the kiddies. Who were just returning from school. Imagine the result! It took endless effort and guarantees. To allow the shot to be tried the next day.

In making “The Shepherd King” in Egypt there were other troubles. The authorities did not want a crowd to congregate. Because of possible political difficulties. Finally an entire regiment of native troops was hired. In their stead. The funds going to the mess. Then there were more objections, but finally it was all finished. But—

Just try and get Carlos. To produce in Europe again. Just try.

SOCIAL NOTE

Ralph Kohn. Famous. Acting as interpreter for all American film folk. Visiting Berlin. And he couldn’t speak a word of German. A year ago.

Absolute CLEAN PRINTS

The Tube System is a remarkable improvement over the antiquated tank method of film development and printing departments.

In our Flushing laboratories we develop, tone, fix, tint, and wash film in tubes through which the solutions are circulated by pumping. And every foot is under the constant and careful inspection of experts. Our drying system is just an improvement over the dust-catcher, film-stretching, drum dryers.

We dry film in glass-inclosed cabinets through which washed and humidified air is forced. Film dried in this way is soft and flexible and long-lived. Every producer of motion pictures who wants absolutely clean prints of the highest quality should telephone Bryant 1939 and get our rates. They will be found surprisingly low.

41 Great Paramount Pictures

Thomas Meighan in "Back Home and Broke"

By George Ade

Directed by Alfred Green

Released December 25, 1922

HERE is one that has everything to achieve success—Star, Author, Story and Director. It was specially written by America's foremost humorist for the star. It's even better than "Our Leading Citizen."

A small town story filled with heart-interest and romance, directed by the man who made "The Bachelor Daddy." A splendid supporting cast will be announced later. A great picture for the holidays—or any other time!

Aschers File Denials

Scout Impending Bankruptcy and Financial Chaos As Claimed by Eugene A. Katz in Chicago
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—Alleging that the receiv-erness action instituted recently by Eugene A. Katz against the Cosmopolitan Securities Co., and Harry, Max, and Nathan Ascher was the culmination of unsuccessful attempts to force the brokers into paying an exorbitant price for his holdings in the company, attorneys for the Aschers have denied that financial difficulties existed in the affairs of the company or that of Ascher Bros., Inc.

It was denied that the operation of the Ascher string of 25 theaters was imperiled in any way, and it was pointed out that the Aschers are supported financially by Goldwyn and this, they assert, precludes any possibility of bankruptcy in no way connected with Balaban & Katz, who recently leased the Roosevelt from the Aschers.

In an answer to the petition for a receiver, the Aschers described the history of the Cosmopolitan Securi-

York" and "The Five Dollar Baby," which are ready for release.

Satan Is Foiled
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—Wilbur Glenn Voliva, General Overseer in Zion City, Mich., completely baffled the devil, scoring a sensational victory for piety and righteousness, when he heard the confession of one who had visited a picture show. At the Shiloh Tabernacle where about 2,000 persons recently had their souls cleansed of various black magic—such as chewing gum and plucking eyebrows, a travelling man admitted that he had made a deal with Satan, Voliva turned all colors of the spectrum, it is reported, choked hysterically and finally staming out in horror. "Write your wife a letter every night for that," he told the man who had spoken. "We'll put one over on this bird, Satan, yet!"

Sign Marie Prevost

Warner Bros. Have Plans for Three Pictures First—"Little Heroes of Street"

Warner Bros. have signed Marie Prevost to be featured in a number of productions. The first will be "Little Heroes of the Street," the second "The Beautiful and Damned" and the third, "Brass."

"Little Heroes of the Street" is now in production under direction of William Beaudine. Wesley Barry will be co-featured. E. Mason Hopper has been engaged to direct "The Beautiful and Damned" and Wallace Worsley, "Brass."

The Warners have made arrangements with Famous Players for the use of several scenario writers. Monte Katterjohn will prepare
"Brass," "Olga Printzlau," "The Beautiful and Damned," and Julian Josephson, "Main Street."

Cassidy and Elizabeth Johnston, worked on "Little Heroes of the Street."

were starred in "Within the Law" by Vitagraph in 1917.

Hays Going to Coast

Plans Hurried Trip from Bay View, Mich.—Will Be There Six Days and Then Back East

Will H. Hays who is now in Bay View, Mich., with his family will fly a flying visit to the coast before returning to New York. His office stated yesterday that he will be in Los Angeles July 15, will remain there for six days and then return immediately to New York.

The trip was planned to meet the hundreds of people engaged in the actual making of pictures. Mr.
Hays knows the producers and their associates in all parts of the country and it is expected that Hays will be of help to them in their plans for the future.

Nashville, Tenn.—Nashville was "blue" on Sunday. The lid was dropped on a new feature by Chief of Police Smith and a number of officers were stationed to see that the closing law was rigidly enforced.

50% of Profits to Charity

"Forget-Me-Not" which opens at the Criterion on Sunday will be given a special showing at that theater this morning for managers and directors of various orphanages in the city.
Marcus Loew intends donating 50% of the profits each week to a different institutions.

Party Back from South

The Loew party of film folks returned from the South yesterday in a special car. After leaving Ocean View, where the Virginia exhibitor convention was held, the party went to Richmond as the guests of Harry Bernstein, of the Jule Wells Enterprises, and Walter Kirsh, of the Richmond Inn, who is known there as "the man who eats in his own restaurant." Members of the party gave testimonials to the wonderful hospitality of Kirsh during their outings spent in Richmond. A number of personal appearances were made at Norfolk and in Richmond.

The trip, under the leadership of Nils Granlund, was a great success.

ties Co. They state Katz holds a -third interest, purchased in 1913, for $2,500, and that since then he has received dividends amounting to $2,700 over his original investment.

Katz, the aswer states, placed interest of the Metropolitan, at 79th and Halsted St., which is insured by the companies, and after some time was superseded by Max Nathan when his ineffectiveness resulted in a loss to the company.

From that time, the Aschers content, Katz had harmed them in an effort to force the purchase of his interests at a high figure, said to be $110,000. It is further alleged that the demand has been accompanied by letters threatening litigation unless his requests were satisfied.

An offer of $50,000 made to Katz by the Louis, Mo.—The Ascher and the present suit for an accounting and a receivership followed.

The answer denies the affairs of the Cosmopolitan Securities Co.
Ascher Bros., Inc. have become badly entangled, as was charged in the Katz affidavit, nowadays the companies "threatened with or on the verge of bankruptcy." The books and accounts of both companies, according to the plea, are simple and most efficient and are open to Katz's inspection at any time, despite his claim they are closed to him and are confidential.

In a lengthy statement the Aschers declare in part:

"The damage thus caused by Katz's malicious attempt to compel Ascher Brothers to pay him a fancy price for his minority stock in one of their theaters is beyond estimate; and even though the outcome of the hearing set for July 20 shall prove to be a complete victory for the the-trical firm, the unfavorable publicity will not be entirely offset."

An Aug. 15 the Aschers will have completed 13 years in the picture field in Chicago. There are 17 Ascher houses in Chicago, one in Milwaukee, one in Peoria, one in Rockford, Ill., and one in Manitowoc, Wis.

Illinois for Quinn

"1. To discourage the production and presentation of objectionable motion pictures.

"2. To offer constructive suggestions and criticism making for greater popular approval and support.

"3. To work for the elimination of misleading and untruthful advertising.

"4. To strive for betterment generally in the art of making motion pictures, and for this purpose to maintain various departments of service, research statistics and information.

"5. To safeguard the screen from unreasonable regulations and restrictions.

"6. To back up worthy productions through pulpits, press, schools and special bulletins sent out by the B. P. A. and its various affiliated organizations.

"7. To award the B. P. A. merit seal, a mark of excellence that can always be depended upon to productions of unusual merit.

"8. To encourage and help, through a service department of experts, the production and presentation of motion pictures that the whole family can enjoy.

"9. To prevent as far as possible, unfair criticism and propaganda from being circulated against the motion picture art and profession.

"10. And be it further resolved—That the Motion Picture Theater Owners of Illinois co-operate in every way to the end that all the nine points included in the program of the Better Pictures Association of the World shall be carried forward successfully.

Those film men in local circles who recall Mr. Quinn’s ranting against motion pictures in general when he was in New York some time ago are interested in Point Nine, of Quinn’s creed, the prevention of unfair criticism and propaganda being circulated against the motion picture art and profession.

Some film men undoubtedly recall the derning clash between Quinn and Jesse J. Goldburg at the Astor on July 3, 1919, when Quinn attacked the industry and when Goldburg took up the cudgels on behalf of it.

Quinn, who now proposes to prevent unwarranted criticism being heaped on the industry has these kind words to say at the Astor meeting:

"I have been suffering from the bunk and four-lushing of these so-called ‘kings’ of the picture business for four years. They talk about the picture business being the fourth largest in the world today. I say it is the biggest joke in the world today. ***

"In the four years that I have been an exhibitor, there have been about four times that I played a good film to which I could call my family patrons and tell them to come to see. ***

"Studio conditions are rotten, rotten right through to the core. Fifty per cent of these so-called players in the game today should be thrown out. ***

"I still maintain that over 50% of the people in the industry are incapable. Two agencies operating on the coast are willing to testify that the larger percentage of those whom they place in the studios are not placed because of ability."

Priscilla Dean Comes Here

Priscilla Dean and her company are en route for New York to shoot scenes in the Eden Musee at Coney Island for her new picture, "Tow Browning."
Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Jefferson, Ia.—When Cecil B. De Mille's "Fool's Paradise," played the Majestic, Manager Wm. Youngclaus book for "Dances with Wolves," the large local department store, who gave away one gross of high grade hair, gave a flash for "Her Husband's Trademark," with the information that the mysterious numbers were the starting hours of the program. An easily applicable idea!

Lansing, Mich.—When Clond Cadly, manager of the Gladium theater, gave his teaser campaign for "Her Husband's Trademark," he took several small flashes in the paper, reading: "Watch 2-4-6-8-10 West." This queer stunt was carried on the following days with text only slightly changed. Manager added a line reading: "for beyond the Rocks" they would be able to see the picture free. Fifty kids responded in a jiffy. The theater paid for the signs and the boys went all over town taking hair-raising trials of this picture.

Nampa, Ia.—The Strand told the youngsters of the town it helped them supply themselves with funny caps, haul out their toy drums, and parade down "Beyond the Rocks" they would be able to see the picture free. Fifty kids responded in a jiffy. The theater paid for the signs and the boys went all over town taking hair-raising trials of this picture.

Webster City, Ia.—Hairpins were used in advertising the attention of the multitude to "Fool's Paradise" at the Isis. On the afternoon preceding its first day, Manager A. C. Schumum distributed one thousand of them among women shoppers in the store. To each pin was attached a little card reading, "Save this hairpin. You will need it to keep your hair in order during the hair-raising trials of "Cecil B. DeMille's greatest production, etc." It made them smile and many came to see the picture.

Ft. Blint, Mich.—Nothing in a long while has pleased the automobile country so much as the free tickets given away. Manager B. D. Bayly of the Regent as part of his exploitation for "Her Husband's Trademark." Bailey stood in front of his theater and took the license numbers of six automobiles as they passed by. These he published in his newspaper ad the next day with instructions that each person recognizing his number should clip the ad from the paper, write his name and address in the blank space provided, and present it at the box-office, where he would receive two free admissions. By requiring the person who used his name and address on the blank, Bailey secured additional names for his mailing list.

Adrian, Mich.—Manager Elwood M. Simons of the New Family created quite a stir when he inserted a wanted poster in the Adrian Daily Telegram, outlining the plot of his picture and ending it with a declaration, "Find the time the cameraman dog, the operative advertising secured by the theater, the telegram made a mystery story out of it and featured it in the news columns.

Louisville, Ky.—Three hundred new tickets were used in news space free. A street ballyho of which was seen by thousands in a city where all ballyhous are strictly tabooed and an attempt to make them patent was fail numbered on the unique film exploitation stunt for "The Crossroads of New York" at the Mary Anderson theater. Advertisement ran: "Said Mr. Sine, goes the full credit for the foresight and execution that brought stunt into motion..."

Cameo
"Sherlock Holmes," the John Barrymore detective drama, continues for another week.

Capitol
What is styled, "Popular Request Program," is being offered here. There is no lengthy feature film, all of the screen numbers being short subjects with Charles Chaplin's trench story, "Shoulder Arms" holding down the "big letter" position. In addition, there is another Robert C. Bruce Wilder-ness Tale, "Nights of Many Shadows"; "Hope," which features Marty Astor, is a Jack Eaton Sport Review, entitled "Record Breakers" and the customary magazine.

Cohan
"In the Name of the Law." is in the second week of its engagement.

Central
"The Storm" continues its indefinite run.

Criterion
Viola Dana in "The Five Dollar Baby," with the program unchanged, is here for the last week.

Rialto
Thomas Meighan in "If You Believe It. It's So," has been moved from the Rivoli, the other film numbers being a Marx animated cartoon, "What a Difference a Little Hair Will Make," "A Trip to Paris Mountain" and the magazine. Franz Von Suppe's "The Beautiful Galatea," is the overture which is immediately followed by what is billed as "Rieseneck's Classic Jazz." "Flirt for Jack" is the title of the baritone solo and at the new organ, Seymour Kauf- man gold plays "So This Is Jersey," the numbers for which are credited to Rose Peters, round out the musical part of the program.

Rivoli
Frederick von Flotow's "Martha," is the overture, after which the pictorial goes on. This is followed in turn by "Color Sketches," a Primo reel, by Sono, "Oriental" is sung by Miriam Lux, soprano, Beatrice Knight, contralto, Maurice Kontrow, bar-itone and the Rivoli make ensemble and then Jack Holt appears in "Man Uncon-trollable." Lillian Powell and the ensemble then render "Audra's Dance," from the "Peer Gynt Suite," by Grieg and a Universal comedy, "Short Weight," with Brownie, closer.

Strand
Selections from "The Mikado," the Gilbert Sullivan opera, comprise the overture, followed by what is programmed as "Here and There." Madeline MacGuigan, violinist, plays Wieniawski's "Faust Fantasy," after which the usual Topical Review is offered Kitty McLaughlin, soprano, and Harold Brown, tenor sing the vocal prologue to the feature, "A Fool There Was." A Pat Sulli-van animated cartoon, "Felix in the Swim," browsesthe comedy relief after that and the organism close.

Pathe Creeps Up

Playing Fine Baseball — Defeated Vitagraph and Hodkinson on Sunday

Quite a furor has been created in the baseball league by the sensational pace set by Pathe. The Roosters, have hit their stride and are considered by their rivals as a dangerous contender for the championship. Their defeat of the First National team incurred them with the confidence to go in and win, and their accomplishment of last Saturday demystifies the caliber of ball they are dispensing.

In a double-header at Elks Field, Long Island City, they defeated Vitagraph in the first game 7-3, and Hodkinson in the second game 6-3.

At the Catholic Protective grounds, Goldwyn defeated Metro 12-7. Messick, who started in the box for Metro was replaced in the third by Loen, who failed to stop the Goldwyn sluggers. Borack for the Lions was not as effective as usual and was hit hard and often. The game resolving into a batting duel for both sides and when the smoke cleared Goldwyn was on top. Batteries: Borack and Caulway. Messick, Loen and Ellesworth.

By mutual consent Paramount, Universal and First National did not play, but have arranged to play off the postponed games as twilight games, or double headers on Saturdays.

In the Courts

Because Mary Pickford authorized two music publishing houses to use her photograph and autograph on the cover of a song based on her picture, "Daddy Long Legs," the Appellate Division has dismissed a suit brought in her behalf against the Waterman, Berlin & Snyder Co., to recover the minimum royalty agreed to be paid, and reversed a judgment for $2,500 for Elizabeth A. Reay, to whom the claim was assigned.

The opinion of the court showed that the day after Miss Pickford personally made an exclusive contract with the defendant for the use of her autograph and photograph for a song based on "Daddy Long Legs," her mother and attorney made a similar contract with the Broadway Music Corp., which published "Dear Old Daddy Long Legs." The court said that the evidence showed that while the defendant sold 480,000 copies of its song, the other publisher sold 414,210 copies and paid Miss Pickford $2,021 royalties to Feb. 28, 1920. The defendant had paid $2,597 on "Daddy Long Legs," "The Hooligans," and "Heart of the Hills." It was decided that because of the alleged breach of contract by Miss Pickford, the Appellate Division also that Miss Pickford's attorney agreed by the defendant that as compensation for its loss on "Daddy Long Legs," because of the competition the defendant could have sold the next pair released by Miss Pickford for a sure song, and it was agreed in this picture would be "Pollyanna." Upon advising the publisher of "Pollyanna" had reserved the song rights and the defendant could not use it, the defendant paying any more royalties, and suit was brought.

The court says that the defendant was induced to keep on paying royalties after Miss Pickford had broken her agreement, as the result of the promise that was not kept, "plainly sustained damages result from Miss Pickford's violation of contract."

from Chicago with details of Better Pictures Move—Committee of Seven Planned

John A. Quinn, pres of the Better Pictures Association of the world arrived in New York yesterday from Chicago with details of his better pictures idea. He is scheduled in a meeting of the important city there will be committees of seven appointed. In instance these will be composed a member of the Federation of churches a representative of the Jewish church a rabbi representing Jewish faith a business man interested the promotion of better film relations a representative of men's clubs and an official of the Better Pictures Association.

One of Quinn's plans as he outlined them yesterday follow:

The country will be divided into six sections the East the Middle West and the Far East. Western squatters will be in New York Western Chicago and Eastern Los Angeles.

Review theaters will be established in these three cities for the exhibition of any worthwhile productions regardless of company affiliation. These theaters will be of above-average quality and will only be booked and used the public of the people who belong to the B.P.A. by means of luncheon and son to be sent out by that organization.

National Better Pictures Week be launched in the Fall and a non-wear membership drive be held in September.

Operators' War Chest

Decide Self-Assessment of 15% To Fight T. O. C. C.—Held Meeting Yesterday Morning

Determination and to acced to the T. O. C. C. was expressed concurrently in the wagers of operators was the general attitude expressed at a meeting which he quoted herein can be held. Picture Machine Operators Local 306 yesterday morning. The wage reduction was offered the men as a basis to negotiate a wage increase for the year commencing Sept. 1st. The high cost of rental being given by the theater owners as the basis of the reduction. The operator body declared the present attempt of theater owners to cut expenses by reducing wages was both ill directed and ill-timed. The meeting was attended by the operators.

A motion was offered and passed unanimously whereby the men went on record as willing to pay a self-inflicted assessment of 15% between now and the wage scale agreement to provide additional funds to carry out the policy they have decided upon. Namely, to accept no wage reduction. It was pointed out that this 15% assessment would net a great deal upon the men, but the general attitude at the meeting was to "give until it hurts."

No clamor or disturbance marked the meeting. The body had previously listened to the wage scale committee of the Chamber of Commerce and the individual operators had expressed inability to conform to the reduced scale. Statements of these men to the effect that living costs made it impossible to accept the cut were confirmed.

In addition considerable discussion was expressed concerning a statement which appeared in the trade press attributed to an exhibitor claiming that he can "break in" in three hours as operators.

Speakers contended that while the modern projection upon machinery and the view of screen results demanded the standards for operator qualifications were constantly growing more rigid and responsibility more pressing.

The findings of Local 306 will be sent to the T. O. C. C. at an early date.

Ingram Film at the Astor

Rex Ingram's "The Prisoner of助力" will open at the Astor Theater on Monday, July 31 for an extended run.

Hepworths Placed

Burr Nickle Prod. Secure English Output—To Be Released on State Rights Market

An interesting deal in the independent field was announced yesterday by Burr Nickle, president of Burr Nickle Prod., with offices in Los Angeles, who stated his concern had acquired the productions of the Hepworth Picture Plays, Ltd. of London, for distribution in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Nickle has just returned to California after spending several weeks in the east, during which time he concluded negotiations with Thomas MacMahan, attorney for Hepworth in the United States. The pictures will be distributed on a state rights basis.

The first of the new productions will be ready in August, and it is planned to release the pictures twice each year. The first will be "The City of Beautiful Nonsense" and the next "Sunken Rocks."

While Nickle was in New York, he made arrangements with Leslie Mason, to act as his eastern representative, Nickle expects to return to New York about Sept. 1st.

Hager Going to Holland for "U"

Ince's Exchanges?

Producer's Own Distribution Talked Of—Wire of Denial Comes From the Coast

That Thomas H. Ince intends forming his own distributing organization is a report that is being discussed in New York.

The story goes that Ince, who has completed his next year's output, is seriously considering the formation of a releasing organization to possibly bear his name. At present the producer is involved in litigation with Associated First National over his next season's series, in which there will probably be little pictures.

On Monday a telegram asking Ince for a statement regarding this was sent to the coast, and yesterday the following response was received by THE FILM DAILY:

"No truth to report I am forming my own distributing organization nor reissuing my former subjects at the present time."

The latter portion of Ince's telegram concerned the report that he intended state righting a number of old pictures including "Civilization." He was asked to comment on that, as well as the report regarding the releasing company.

Indecency is the official reason.

Harry Scott Resigns

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Detroit—Harry Scott, First National manager, has resigned. His health is not of the best.

Floyd Brockell, First National supervisor of exchanges, stated yesterday that H. A. Band, Central Division manager, was at present in Detroit in charge of the office. No one has been named to succeed Scott as yet.

Film of Mars

To Be Shot in About Two Years—Astronomers Developing Idea

Motion pictures of Mars are being planned for the first time, to discover whether the planet is inhabited, according to Dr. David Todd, emeritus professor of astronomy and navigation at Averest College. Todd is head of the Mars expedition to the Bahamas Islands, which sailed last April and established an observatory in an abandoned United States fort at Nassau.

"Summer will be the best time of the year to attempt photographs from the Northern Hemisphere and midnight will be the time of day," said Dr. Todd. "Every night for six weeks, when the opposition changes very little, Mars will swim through the field of our telescope. With luck, the size of the planet on the negative should be about that of a quarter, or at least of a dime."

"To obtain this film a special mirror, slightly concave and as big as the drive wheel of a locomotive and nearly as thick, will be set up at an angle of 45 degrees at the base of the telescope. It weighs 10 tons. The camera, which has been specially constructed at a cost of $3,000, will be placed at a point some 40 feet above and aimed down at the mirror. Parallel rays, infinite in number, pass through the focal point and are reflected in the mirror."

"The actual photographic will be done by James G. Sands, a photographer."

Dr. Todd was astronomer in charge of the American expedition to Japan to observe the eclipse of the sun in 1887. He is interested in the problem of photographing the solar corona, which will be attempted in Western Australia, Sept. 21, 1923, when the next eclipse occurs.

Quinn claimed to be strongly organized in New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago and Washington. He said a committee of New York would have to be appointed that one for Chicago was now being drafted but that pending the acceptance of certain individuals he could not make public the names.

The B.P.A. is an outgrowth of the Motion Picture and Theatrical Co. Operating Association of the World. It maintained offices on West 47th Street, New York. Ten months ago when Quinn left New York for Los Angeles he was asked yesterday whether there had happened to the local head quarters and replied that the 47th Street office had been abandoned as one at 500 Fifth Avenue opened. This, he said, has been in operation.

Positive Quality

The QUALITY of the motion picture PRINTS PRINTED at our Flushing laboratories has always stood supreme.

This quality consists of: 1. Putting into the positive every detail of the negative. 2. Treating the film in a way that makes it stand up for an unusually large number of rushes. The TUBE SYSTEM of developing, fixing, tinting, washing, hand-drying in the reason. Our tints do not rub off, or smear on the film, and our method of drying entirely eliminates brittleness, thus greatly increasing the life of the film.

Fox Loses Appeal

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Albany, N. Y.—The Court of Appeals has decided against Fox Film in their action against Stuart Hirschman. Fox brought action to obtain awards made by the City of New York for certain property which had been conveyed to the Chop Tank Co., and later transferred to Fox. The latter company were successful in their action in the lower court, but the Court of Appeals decided to grant a new trial.

The Loew's Buffalo Theater Co., which had leased some 900 from the Eilde Clothes Company of Buffalo to vacate property they now occupy, the property was leased to the theater company and subleased to the Goldie Clothes Co. The Court of Appeals held that the three month's lease clause applied only to the original owners, the Loew's Buffalo Theater Co.

Putting It Over

An exploitation campaign, Brooklyn-wide in scope, was successfully started by the big receipts by Edward L. Hyman of the Mark Strand and it cost only $18! Tie-ups composing every well situated ice cream shop, shoe store, drug store, drug store, soft drink stand, sporting goods shop and pet store, on the main thoroughfares of Brooklyn, were achieved. Employed in this direction were window cards 2x29 with a colored picture of an eskimo boy standing at the top, reading directly below. One of these:

"My Daddy is Nanook of the North. Ma, he and I are playing in this Pathe Picture at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theater Beginning Sunday. Try a Nanook Sundae right from the icy North cooling and delicious." Many local ice cream proprietors co-operated with the Strand to the extent of concocting a new sundae and calling it a Nanook Sundae. Shops selling sporting goods were induced to make a display of thermos bottles with relatively lettered Strand theater window cards inserted. The same idea was worked with drug stores selling moth balls; electrical shops with electric fans; fur shops with furs; pet shops with "Nanook's pet" etc.

Piqua, O.—Exploiting short subjects seems to pay Manager Harry W. Kress of May's Opera House. His publicity man Marc Bauser, through the co-operation of the Dayton and Troy Traction Co., recently brought to life First National's Toomerville Trolley, the Skipper and Aunt Eppie Hogg, on the streets of this town. The oldest and smallest car in the line, being properly bannered, appeared on the streets with Bauer properly outfitted as The Skipper and with Martin Sweet as Aunt Eppie. The Skipper drove the car over the regular routes traveled by the other cars of the company while attached to the rear was a sign carrying the picture of Captain Franke. This unique tie-up is more of than ordinary interest when the fact is taken into consideration that the stunt naturally upset local street car sched- ules and that both car and trailer had to be somewhat remodeled for the occasion.

Hartford, Conn.—With the aid of Tom Meighan, Paramount star, Manager of the Capitol was able to sell "The Bachelor Daddy" and at the same time hook in with the most popular sports of baseball, Clancy sold the idea to the Daily Times to have all the boys on the baseball teams of the many public and parochial schools visit the Capit ol Tuesday morning for a pre-re lease showing of The Bachelor Daddy." The Times in turn sold the idea through their columns. This was the Times' own party and that all the boys were guests of the paper. Clancy simply donating the theater. The boys met at a given place, formed in platoons and paraded to the theater. After these plans were made, Meighan was invited to participate and he replied with a wire of congratulations to the Times, commending it for their interest in local school sports. Meighan also donated a silver loving cup, presented to the team making the nearest appearance in the line of march. Two bands were donated, one by the Times and the other made up of musicians of the theater. To make the marching more musical, the Scouts were tied up for their line and drum corps. Approximately three thousand or more to be exact, 24 boys marched in the parade. No advertising of any description was carried by the theater. All the newspaper space was free. Saturday afternoon the Times carried two 3-column photographs with a full column story, topped by a 7-colon head on the front page giving details of the turn-out. This display was augmented by another color and a half of news matter and of photos on an inside page. Clancy secured nearly 6,000 boost and aroused all sorts of interest when the picture opened. It is a very big business. Fred E. Walt Paramount exploiter from the Haven Exchange assisted in ran the campaign.

Roberts Handling Proposed Club

Los Angeles—Theodore Rob is chairman pro tem of the committee of film folks who are considering the formation of a club similar to the one in New Y.

The club is designed to embody every one connected with the industry, whether he be a star or not, for the distribution motion pictures.

Mack Sennett Comedies Corp. moved from Room 302 Capitol Theater Bldg., to more commodious quarters in Rooms 402 and 403.
Finance Corporation Launched; Griffith, Powers and Price Directors

E. Brulatour, Arthur S. Friend, A. H. T. Banzhaf, Whitman Bennett, J. J. McCarthy Also Interested, and Others Not Directly Connected with Motion Pictures on Board

After a year's quiet work in organizing and testing the practicability of the plan, the Producers Finance Corp., incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, announced its personnel and its offices yesterday.

Its board of directors includes the following:

Whitman Bennett, Jules E. Brulatour, Arthur S. Friend, A. Powers, Oscar A. Price, John B. Cochran, president Franklin National Bank of Washington; A. J. Dalton, president Main and Creek Coal Co., of Huntington, W. Va., and J. J. McCarthy, who has been identified with W. Griffith in the routing of that director's important pictures. Frank D. McCarthy, former national executive of the Liberty Loan campaigns and his assistant treasurer of the loan bureau, is president of the company. Of late, Mr. Wilson has been identified with motion pictures and, it is said, was largely instrumental in securing finances for the production of "Way Down East." Conversely D. Marsh, a broker, has given a contract for the sale of more than $5,000,000 of the company's stock.

Producers Finance was organized last year ago by Wilson, who at the age of the war, joined Griffith, and during his activities organized D. Griffith, Inc.

When this work was completed he secured several important men in the industry, the people who have long been in business, and the men who have been identified with the industry in general.

Producers Finance," says a statement, "will solve the long standing difficulty under which the motion picture industry is laboring in getting

Back to Famous Players on September 1

Despite Contrary Reports, Apparently Theaters Are Not Involved—Offices in Atlanta, Charlotte, Dallas, New Orleans and Oklahoma City Involved

Famous Players, it is understood, will assume complete charge on Sept. 1 of the five exchanges now controlled and operated by the Southern Enterprises, Inc. of Atlanta. The offices are located in Atlanta, Charlotte, N. C., Dallas, Oklahoma City and New Orleans.

While no one at Famous Players yesterday cared to discuss the deal, it is understood that the exchanges are reverting to Famous because that portion of the contract with S. A. Lynch which covers distribution of Paramount pictures in the South has expired.

Phila. Sewed Up

Deal on Aldine with Stanley Would Give Latter Complete Say Over First Runs There (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Philadelphia—Unless some unusual occurrence should happen the Stanley Co. of America will assume full control of the first run situation here by virtue of an impending deal which will give to that company the operation of the Aldine theater.

The Aldine, 19th and Chestnut, is the one first run which distributors other than Famous Players and First National have had here. Although no official statement has been made by either party concerned, it is known that the signatures are all that is necessary for the Felt Bros. to turn over the Aldine to Stanley on the following basis:

Stanley will give the Feltis a cash consideration of $25,000. Stanley will assume the actual carrying charges on the property such as the interest on mortgages, the rent and taxes. This is believed to total about $60,000 a year. The Feltis are to be guaranteed against a loss in operation and the profits are to be split equally both ways. The lease is to run for 20 years.

Fitzmaurice Chosen

Will Direct Pola Negri in Her First American-Made Picture—Fleming Here for Brady Film

The production department at Famous Players has practically decided that George Fitzmaurice will direct Pola Negri in her first American-made picture.

Miss Negri will arrive in New York sometime next month and will start work about Sept. 15, at the Long Island City plant. Fitzmaurice is at present on the coast preparing to film "Kick In," in which Betty Compson and Bert Lytell will appear.

Victor Fleming is in New York. He will direct Alice Brady in "Anna Ascents," which will also be made on Long Island.

There will probably never be more than four companies at work in the Paramount Eastern studio. The peak will undoubtedly be reached this fall when Alice Brady, Thomas Meighan, Elise Ferguson and Pola Negri will be busy there. As noted, Jack Holt will make part of one picture in the East in August.

Sales managers returning from the South in the past few days are authorities for the reports that the return of the exchanges is only a portion of the deal and that the other companies would give Famous Players complete sway over the management of the Lynch theaters in the South.

One important Famous Players official denied this part of the report and said that the deal involved exchanges only.

At the meeting between the special representatives of Famous Players and S. A. Lynch, Enterprises, Inc., held on April 3, 1919 whereby Southern Enterprises, Inc. were to be formed in Delaware with a capitalization of $5,000,000. Of the 50,000 shares of stock, each valued at $100, Famous Players got back 25 of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., the remaining half. Lynch was elected president of Southern Enterprises, Inc. with the power to elect all officers as long as he lived. On June 3, 1919, Famous, by virtue of a second contract vested exclusive exhibiting rights in the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma in Southern Enterprises, Inc., for 25 years. A third contract covered the sale of Lynch's

Saunders Back

E. M. Saunders, of Metro, returned yesterday from New Orleans, where he held a sales conference with Southern managers.
DURING the current season," says the Motion Picture World, "there have been presented to the trade some feature productions. Of the 658 productions, some 350 could be called failures. The remaining 300 can be termed average pictures not good enough to set the great public on a frame of mind to care whether they saw more of them or not.

It is worth recording in this connection that the National Committee of Better Films, in its "Year's List," awarded Hodkinson Punch 10% of the first prize of the year. This, in the face of the fact that Hodkinson Exchanges contributed only about 5% of the year's productions.

The selective principle exercised by this corporation, as applied both to pictures and sales personnel, comes near as is humanly possible to assure the Exhibitor a steady supply of sure-proof product.

"The Theatre Owner who can say, "I play Hodkinson 100%," dramatically reduces his percentage of poor pictures—a fact that is borne out by the impartial judgment of the best critical bodies of the industry.

DAN'T MISS IT

DON'T MISS IT

100% BETTER "THE MOTION PICTURE THEATER OF TOMORROW\"
A Picture That Will Get the Money! That's What They All Say About It.

Read what the Trade Experts say:

Universal Appeal
"It carries universal appeal, adults and juveniles alike will acknowledge its charm, and exhibitors will welcome it as a sure-fire box office hit. Jackie's ability to keep an audience fluctuating between tears and laughter was never better demonstrated. Irresistibly funny. Gets the laughs in large quantities. A whirlwind of action."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

His Best Picture
"So different from the usual that it will increase the popularity of Jackie. It is his best picture. There's no doubt about that. He has the audience with him. The pathos is ever keeping pace with the humor. There is no false sentiment. It is all human and genuine. Book 'Trouble' and you'll have no trouble in packing the house."—Motion Picture News.

Splendid Entertainment
"Splendid entertainment and has an appeal that is just about as nearly universal as may be expected in any one picture. Jackie Coogan is a distinct hit. "Coogan is a fine little actor and an intriguing personality throughout and is entitled to the great credit that certainly will be his. But the able efforts of Director Albert Austin should not be overlooked. Austin has executed many situations and bits of action in this production that constitute real commercial screen art and just how nearly they hit the mark is going to be realized by the vast majority of exhibitors—if not every exhibitor—who shows the picture. "With flashes of real fun and touching sentiment to hold the interest."—Exhibitor's Herald.

Will Get the Money
"A picture that will get a lot of money for the average exhibitor because it is a refreshing yarn that will appeal to the women particularly. It is the third of the series the juvenile star is making for Lesser, the first two being 'My Boy' and 'Peck's Bad Boy.' This one holds up to the standard of either of the previous two. "A simple little human interest story is the background for the star. "In the handling of the story the youthful star is given every opportunity to appear to advantage, and in a courtroom scene when he takes the witness stand he manages to put over a bit that would do credit to any of the much older stars of the screen. Wallace Beery makes the roughneck plumber a corking character study, while Gloria Hope is a winsome little housewife. "One of the real wallops is a fight that Beery and a cop put up in the latter part of the picture with the kiddie assisting on the side lines by hurling flower pots, etc."—Variety.

Strong Human Appeal
"The human appeal is so strong and is of such genuine character the picture cannot possibly fail to meet with success before any type of clientele. Jackie does the best work of his career. His work seems inspired. Generous amount of humor balanced with pathos. Take the kid to see it and you'll both have a good time."—Moving Picture World.

German Film Opera

This Time Actual Voices Are to Synchronize with the Action—Notofilm Co. Has It

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Berlin—What its backers maintain will be the first real film opera, will shortly be produced here. It is said arrangements have been made to present it in London also.

It is a first attempt to combine motion pictures with a talking machine, but a work in which the action on the screen will be accompanied by the singing of actual living voices in synchronization.

This is the main novelty of what the film opera hopes to present.

The device for procuring this synchronization, which was demonstrated at the studio shops of the Notofilm Co., is simple. As the pictures are being taken a portion of the musical score, written on a continuous roll, is placed on the prime mover of the machine, and photographed at the same time as the action. It reappears on the screen, forming the lower margin of the film, and serves as a guide to the conductor. A supplementary device gives him control over the speed at which the film is taken.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Richmond, Ind.—Manager F. Hollannd, of the Murray, actually put it over with his local newspaper, the Richmond Item. When he got out his special red printed page on "Trouble," he persuaded the publishers of the Item to include it in their regular afternoon edition and have it delivered to the local carrier. It made a circulation of some 10,000.

Additional publicity was obtained by the story that the picture had just been completed and that the print be shown at the Murray was shipped directly from the studio to the framework and advertising post from the Coogan laboratories in San Francisco.

Mason City, Ia.—The five robust youngsters with Tommy Meighan in "The Bachelor Daddy," suggested that "milk exploitation," pulled by the Palace when the picture played there, John J. Friedl, Paramount exploiter from Des Moines, sold a prominent local dairy on co-operative advertising. This always, the opening hangers were attached to the necks of every milk, cream and buttermilk bottle delivered. The text tied up with the picture in this fashion: "The Bachelor Daddy" wouldn't have been able to handle his family so well if he didn't have Hermanson's milk. The milk dealer has a mailing list that doesn't leave out three people in town, and a letter was sent to each tie-up with the picture.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Manager W. D. McDowell of the Strand was diplomatic enough to land two competitive automobile concerns for a single parade advertising his picture, "The Good Provider." With the operation of S. G. Sladden, Paramount exploiter, this stunt was put over on the main streets during the Easter parade of the day. The two companies were the Mack Motor Truck people and the Buick agency and the banners were worded as follows: "The Good Provider" uses a Mack Truck in his business in order to provide a Buick for his family. See etc. The trucks were harnessed and also draped in flags and bunting. There were four of them, three of which carried new model Buicks. McDowell paid one-third of the cost of the banners, which was his only outlay.

Creston, Iowa—In line with his policy of building up good will toward his picture house from every possible angle, Manager E. Metger, of the Strand, has adopted a plan of showing slides on Saturdays announcing the services to be held in the churches of Creston on the following day. One of Mr. Metger's mottoes is: "The only way to make friends is to let people know what you are like."

Acting on this motto, he began by inviting ministers to attend pre-release showings of his pictures and asked for criticisms from them. While attending a special showing of a picture at the Strand on Saturday noon one of the ministers commented on the value to local merchants of slides advertising their goods.

"Why wouldn't it be a good plan to advertise our Sunday services on the screen every Saturday evening?" he asked. Mr. Metger said it would be a fine plan and offered to show the contest for the idea of appearing on a marked increase in attendance in the minister's church on the Sunday following the showing of the slide. Other ministers in Creston approved of the idea at the beginning, but churchgoers indorsed it and within two weeks slides announcing services in five Creston churches were being displayed. The showing of the slides has added to the popularity of the Strand and made regular patrons of many church people who previously would not attend motion picture shows.

Approximately 10,000,000 readers and motion picture patrons throughout the country have been reached in the first month of the Marshall Neilan-Helen Lynch Contest created for the purpose of giving a direct tie-up for exhibitors showing "Fools First" and "Minnie." Neilan's idea of having the public supply a professional name for Helen Lynch, is now being carried out by "The People's Home Journal," which will run the contest six months, prizes of $300 in cash and other awards being offered. During the first thirty days of the contest 425 large newspapers with an aggregate circulation of over 3,000,000, have taken up the contest, giving much display publicity to all concerned. In a number of instances editorial mention of the contest is being given. In addition to this various newspapers have photographed Miss Lynch, the judges and others connected with the contest. In a number of instances editorial discussion in rival newspapers in certain cities has been given the idea. In Detroit one newspaper argued that the use of a professional name in pictures was silly, while its rival devoted much space to the opposite stand.

Ten days after the contest was first announced in "The People's Home Journal," 7,000 letters submitting names were received by the judges. At this writing nearly 40,000 names have been submitted from all parts of the country with the daily quota of letters increasing with very mail.

Sure Fire Appeal For Those Who Like Human Interest Stories

Louis Burston presents
"FORGET-ME-NOT"
Metro

DIRECTOR ...................... W. S. Van Dyke
AUTHOR ...................... Henry R. Symonds
SCENARIO BY ................... John B. Clymer
CAMERAMAN .................... Arthur L. Todd

AS A WHOLE..... Splendid human interest in picture that conveys a message that should prove to be good audience appeal

STORY....... Makes a very suitable screen vehicle; absorbing but with a few illogical twists toward the end

DIRECTION..... Very good; some highly effective touches; omits one or two important bits of detail

PHOTOGRAPHY .................... Good
LIGHTINGS ....................... First rate PLAYERS....... Bessie Love gives one her best performances so far; Irene Hunt excellent as the mother and Gareth Hughes does very good work

EXTERIORS ....................... Suitable
INTERIORS ....................... All right
DETAIL...... Can be improved by one or two additional sub-titles

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Destitute mother puts child in orphanage and years later adopts boy, passing by her own child unknowingly because she is crippled

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 6,800 feet

"Forget-Me-Not" is a human interest picture from start to finish and should certainly fulfill its double mission of both entertaining and furthering the adoption of orphans. It is an ideal vehicle for arousing interest in children without parents and at the same time carries with it a definite audience appeal that makes it entertaining and quite likely to be a safe box office bet.

Henry Symonds has employed every twist of fate that was ever heard of to gain sympathy for his young heroine and he succeeds in holding it throughout even when things are a bit strained and slightly illogical. For some, "Forget-Me-Not" may contain too contrary a fate. There is so much sorrow cast upon the little orphan girl that it has a tendency to tug too harshly on the heart strings, especially toward the close when, after having become an accomplished violinist, the girl is engaged to play at a wedding and the bridegroom happens to be her orphanage pal, Jimmy, who had promised to come back for her. The picture would have been just as convincing and successful without this wedding and the subsequent death of the bride, especially since they work around to the inevitable happy ending.

The direction, on the whole, is very good. There are numerous excellent touches that make the story register and the production is suitable in every way. Occasionally he has slipped up on detail, which, however, can be remedied by the insertion of a title. The spectator is not told what became of the destitute mother from the time she put her child in the asylum until she is shown living in apparent luxury some years later. And there is no explanation as to why she does not try to locate her adopted son, who wanders away following the death of his bride. The symbolic sequence at the end, picturing the story represented in the strains of the violin, is beautifully done but seems a trifle anti-climactic.

Bessie Love does some of her very best work in "Forget-Me-Not" and the scene of parting between Miss Love and Gareth Hughes, is sure to choke many throats. The cast is a very good one and Irene Hunt, as the mother, is a splendid type, especially in the opening reel. Otto Lederer and his dog, Queenie, are unusually interesting.

Story: The mother, looking for a child to adopt, did not know that the little lame girl who pleaded to be adopted, was her own and so she took the boy, Jimmy, the little girl’s pal. Jimmy promised to return for his childhood sweetheart but it was not until years later when the girl had been adopted by an old musician and become a concert violinist that Jimmy came back and the mother learned that the girl was her own.

Has Good Exploitation Possibilities

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There seems to be a demand for heart interest pictures and exhibitors who know that they go over big with their patrons, can rest assured that they will be pleased with "Forget-Me-Not." They cannot help but like Bessie Love as the heroine of this tale of the little girl placed in an orphanage and unable to secure adopted parents because of her crippled limb. You can safely promise them it is one of her best performances. They’ll like Gareth Hughes, too.

Exploitation should be simple enough because you won’t have any trouble at all in enlisting the aid of local charitable organizations or those interested in orphan children. A benefit performance would be one sure means of launching a run and you will be doing a good work and at the same time helping your own box office along.
Will Please Those Who Liked the Old Vampire Pictures

“A FOOL THERE WAS”
Fox

DIRECTOR ....................... Emmett J. Flynn
AUTHOR ....................... Porter Emerson Browne
SCENARIO BY .................... Bernard McConville
CAMERAMAN ................. Lucien Andriot and Irving Rosenberg

AS A WHOLE......A satisfying production and entertaining although not likely to appeal to all

STORY ......Practically the same in every detail as the Theda Bara version of several years ago

DIRECTION ......Very good; has toned down the “vamping” sequences considerably and generally shows good judgment.

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Excellent
LIGHTINGS ...................... Good with but one or two exceptions

PLAYERS ......Estelle Taylor does very good work as the vampire but she is not wholly convincing; Lewis Stone gives excellent performance as the “fool”; Irene Rich splendid and Mahlon Hamilton suitable; good cast throughout

EXTERIORS ..................... Not many
INTERIORS ...................... Appropriate
DETAIL .......................... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Married man falls victim to vampire who has already ruined lives of others whom he knew

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......6,604 feet

There was so much discussion and such extensive publicity given the selection of an actress to play the vampire in William Fox’s second picturization of Porter Emerson Browne’s stage play, that it is all the more interesting to note the performance of Estelle Taylor who was finally acceded the part. And the consensus of opinion is quite likely to be unanimous—that Theda Bara was the only genuine vampire the Fox studios have seen, even considering the fact that Valeska Suratt did some strenuous vamping herself for the patrons of Fox pictures.

Miss Taylor works very hard and apparently sincerely to put the part over but with all her effort she is too obviously “dressed” for the part, both in her outward appearance and in her acting. She has the physical qualities usually associated with the vamp, dark hair, black eyes, but she does not use them as the natural vamp would be expected to. Her gowns are not striking and her general manner of dressing isn’t anything that would attract your attention particularly. She is exceptionally well photographed but given too many close-ups.

The really best performances are given by Lewis Stone as the “fool” and Irene Rich, in the role of the forgiving wife. Stone is convincing even when the things required of him by the part are not, and Irene Rich is always an interesting performer. Marjorie Daw and Mahlon Hamilton are quite adequate in minor parts.

Director Flynn has given a better production than was found in the Theda Bara version and he has sustained the interest splendidly at all times. The photography is excellent and the cameraman has gotten in some fine interior long shots.

The story follows the previous picture almost identically except that Flynn has toned down the vamping business considerably. Stone smashes the mirrors as did Theda’s fool and the vampire scatters the rose petals as of yore, only you don’t see the rose. Probably they come already prepared for scattering in these modern days.

Story: John Schuyler, banker, bids good bye to his wife and children and sails for Europe aboard the same steamer as Gilda Fontaine for love of whom, Parmeelee, an associate of Schuyler’s, kills himself as the boat is ready to sail. Schuyler also falls a victim to her spell and returns to the States broken but unable to give up Gilda. Later he plans to return to the wife who forgives him but Gilda returns to him and he is killed by a fall while trying to attack her.

Promise Good Production and Acting But Consider Your Audience’s Desires

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Perhaps William Fox is trying to renew interest in vampire pictures which the public has apparently become disinterested in in the past few years. At any rate he has seen fit to make a second picturization of the play inspired by Kipling’s poem, “The Vampire,” the first being Theda Bara’s debut as one of the screen’s best known vampires.

The success of “A Fool There Was” will depend largely upon the class you cater to. Even though the Flynn production contains none of the so-called “heavy vamp stuff” found in the old pictures, it is possible that the better class of picture patrons will be scared away by the title although you can make promises assuring them there is nothing offensive in the film. You can also promise good acting and a picture that has a well sustained interest. They won’t get tired looking at it. The individual exhibitor knows his audience best and should decide for himself in this case. Use the players’ names.
We've Got The Pictures

AMERICAN RELEASING CORPORATION take pleasure in announcing its control and distribution of the most sought-after picture of the year, the GEORGE BEBAN production, "THE SIGN OF THE ROSE," which will be booked by us first of all with Mr. Beban and his company of eight players for record-breaking engagements in the first run houses of the nation—and later on, but not now, to be booked alone without the act. "The Sign of the Rose" is today the world's greatest motion picture attraction.

4 OCTOBER 1: "THE WOMAN HE LOVED." A J. L. Foxingham production. Directed by Edward Sloman from a story by William V. Mong. All-star cast including Marguerite de la Motte, William V. Mong and eight other well known players.

7 OCTOBER 22: "THE HOUSE OF SOLOMON." Starring William H. Strauss supported by Brenda Moore and Nat Deaver. Directed by Lem F. Kennedy. This is the greatest Jewish comedy-drama ever made. It is a combination of the pathos and beauty of Peter Grimm and the humor of Abe Potsa. Produced and presented by Carl Krusada from the story by Val Cleveland.

Poor Story Makes Gladys Walton's Latest Disappointing

Gladys Walton in "THE TROOPER"
Universal

DIRECTOR ....................... Harry B. Harris
AUTHOR .......................... A. P. Younger SCENARIO BY .................... A. P. Younger CAMERAMAN ...................... Earl Ellis
AS A WHOLE .............. Below the average of star's offerings; comedy romance that is weak in situations and rarely amusing

STORY ............ Gives star an adequate role but not enough good opportunities for her to make much of an impression

DIRECTION ........... Apparently had to use the padding to fill in the story which consequently drags at times

PHOTOGRAPHY ................... Average

LIGHTINGS .................... All right

STAR ............ Tries to put her part over but the handicap is too great

SUPPORT ............ Fair; includes Jack Perrin, Roscoe Karns, Thomas Holding, Kathleen O'Connor and Mary Philbin

EXTERIORS ...................... Few

INTERIORS ..................... Adequate

DETAIL ......................... Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY ........ Slavey in traveling show company finds the romance she dreams of and wins the affection of her Romeo

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,000 feet

Gladys Walton has had so many better stories than this one that it is quite likely her admirers will be somewhat disappointed with "The Trouper." It is weak in situations and while it contains a role similar to those that the star handles best, it does not give her enough to do nor does it amount to very much at all until the last reel when she captures the ascending leading lady and the show manager. Up to this point she is merely shown dreaming of the leading man or else being abused by the star of the company.

The director couldn't possibly have done very much better with the story and it isn't altogether his fault that it drags badly at times, because, in order to get it to any kind of feature length it was necessary to use a good deal of padding, such as visualizing the slavey's dreams, etc. The first reel or two are very slow moving and even when they do get into the story, things happen along so leisurely that there is no well sustained interest, and no attempt at suspense at all. The final reel contains the feature's only live bits, found in the slavey's effort to bring about the capture of her employer who, with the leading lady, has robbed a bank.

Considerable confusion is caused in the mind of the spectator through the resemblance of Jack Perrin and Roscoe Karns, to each other. This likeness is not strong but sufficiently obvious to keep you on the alert when either one of them appear to make sure which one it is.

Gladys Walton tries hard to make the most of her part and the supporting cast is about fair. Jack Perrin and Roscoe Karns are suitable but overact occasionally. Some of the sub-titles try to make up for the humor that is missing in the pictures. There is one good one where the dramatic actor, imprisoned, calls upon Shakespeare to send Houdini to get him out.

Story: Mamie Judd (Gladys Walton) is a general utility girl with a traveling stock company. Her one pleasure is in adoring Herman Jenks, leading man, who rewards her admiration now and then with a gift of his photograph. Mamie overhears Kramer, the manager, and Miss La Rue, the star, planning to fleece young Neal Seldon, son of the town banker. When Selden doesn't "come through," they rob the bank and prepare to leave town. Through the efforts of Mamie they are captured and Jenks finally realizes he loves Mamie.

May Please Star's Admirers But Is Not Up to Her Recent Offerings

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Maybe the star's admirers will be satisfied with "The Trouper" so if you number many of them among your patrons you can show it to them. But for a straight entertainment, regardless of the star, it is doubtful if they will be pleased with this one. It is a comedy romance but neither strong in romance nor amusing in comedy so there is not much that you can safely make promises for.

A double feature program might make use of "The Trouper" or if you secure good accompanying short reel offerings to go with it, you could probably get it over. The title is a fair one and catchlines with stills of the star in her slavey costume will be enough to give them an idea of what it is about. It can be exploited easily enough but it is not strong enough to warrant very special attention.
Satisfying Entertainment In South Sea Island Story That Is Different

Jack Holt in
"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE"
Paramount

DIRECTOR .................. Joseph Henabery
AUTHOR ........................ Hamilton Smith
SCENARIO BY ................. Julien Josephson
CAMERAMAN .................. Faxion Dean

AS A WHOLE...... First rate adventure offering with some real looking fights and villainous plotting comprising the action STORY...... Another good vehicle for Holt; fairly original and with more plot than most of the South Sea stories DIRECTION...... Provides realistic atmosphere and there is a well sustained interest; slightly more detail than is necessary at times
PHOTOGRAPHY ..................... Good
LIGHTINGS ...................... All right
STAR .................. Sure to please any audience SUPPORT...... Sylvia Breamer pleasing leading lady with Jean De Briac and Clarence Burton the principal bad men
EXTERIORS ..................... Good
INTERIORS ........................ Suitable
DETAIL ........................ Satisfices
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Hero inherits uncle’s pearl fisheries and encounters adventure and romance in South Sea Isle

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 5,795 feet

Hamilton Smith’s story of the South Seas contains more action and live bits than most of those with similar atmosphere that reach the screen. Usually it is chiefly romance that occupies most of the footage with plenty of attractive locations included to help make up for the missing action. But in “The Man Unconquerable” there is a lot of good action and enough plot to keep it going without padding or stretching it to fill the proper number of reels.

And the plot is an interesting and sufficiently original one to make it different from the others. It is a tale of pearl fisheries, scheming employees and a hero who becomes the owner of company which has a rival in the father of the heroine. There is a good deal of effective detail and Director Henabery has distributed the action in very good style. There are also some good comedy touches. The meeting of the hero and heroine will get a laugh. Hero attempts to destroy a fly which has been annoying him and attracts the attention of the heroine when he swats the fly while it is resting on a bald gentleman’s head. The girl saves him from arrest by telling the native police the other man had insulted her.

Jack Holt supplies many of the thrills in his fights with those plotting his ruin and toward the climax. Henabery has worked up quite a degree of suspense even though you are absolutely certain that the hero will come out of the battle unharmed. There are one or two instances where a little too much detail is used, such as in the sequence just prior to that in which the owner of the rival concern is murdered.

The role of Robert Kendall is well suited to Holt and he’s thoroughly pleasing in this. Sylvia Breamer is good as his leading lady and Clarence Burton is a convincing foreman of the fisheries while Jean De Briac deals in stolen gems. The cast is good throughout.

Story: There is continual controversy between Kendall, who has inherited his uncle’s pearl fisheries, and Durand, owner of the rival fisheries, because Kendall’s man, Nilssen, poaches on Durand’s waters. Kendall falls in love with Durand’s daughter, Rita, but Perrier, a Frenchman, convinces the Durands that Kendall is an enemy and when Durand is murdered, Rita accepts Perrier’s theory that Kendall is guilty. Meantime Kendall follows a clue that proves to him that Perrier and Nilssen killed the old man and stole his famous rose pearls. How the thieves are caught and Kendall is rewarded by Rita’s love completes the story.

You Can Promise Good Action and a Pleasing Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is an entertaining offering that should please most any audience. It should appeal strongly to the male members of your audience and for their benefit you might make extra promises for adventure and excitement. Talk about the pearl fisheries because it is something a bit out of the ordinary and for the women, you can tell them there is a pleasing romance included with Sylvia Breamer playing the heroine.

Jack Holt’s admirers will have another good one coming to them in “The Man Unconquerable” so play up his name prominently. You can safely say it is a picture of the South Seas that is different from the usual run of South Sea Island pictures. A trailer of one of the fights should surely bring them back to see the feature.

DETAIL .............................. O. K.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Hero fights in ring against odds to gain the purse that will save the health of his crippled sister
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 4,600 feet

Here you have the regulation stuff presented in the regulation way. The hero has returned from France with his lungs gassed, his bonus delayed, his sister crippled and his mother in poverty. Besides this he is out of a job and can't find one. In fact there is nothing the matter with the hero that a little money wouldn't help. But then he didn't want the money for himself but he needed it to pay for an expensive operation for his crippled sister and if there was anything over he would give it to his helpless mother.

This is the opening situation in "Afraid to Fight." Luck saves the family. The hero knocks down a prize fighter who was manhandling a boy. "Back to the boiler factory with the rest of the rivits," says the trainer to his former champ' as he proceeds to sign up the hero for the big fight.

The rest of the story runs along well tried and very conventional lines. The action is reserved for the fight scenes which are well directed and ably acted. Ringside views and prize fight scenes always make good screen material but you know before it starts that the hero is going to win in the end, and the bell will save him several times from being counted out. The production as a whole does not move very swiftly but is burdened with minor situations and much explanation. The characters present little that is distinctive and nothing that has not been done before.

The direction has given a lot of importance to minor detail but has failed to gain very much sympathy for his people or the situations in which they are thrown. Perhaps the most unconvincing point of the entire production comes when the hero takes a beating from his sweetheart's rejected suitor. He does not fight back because his trainer told him not to reveal his identity. Of course in the end this assault is revenged but it is difficult to believe that a good fighter will take a horse whipping in the presence of his girl regardless of his trainer's advice.

Supporting Frank Mayo are Lillian Rich, Peggy Cartwright who does an attractive juvenile role, Lydia Knott and W. S. McDunnough.

Story: Down-and-out world's war veteran gets three months in the country to recuperate and train for a big fight which he wants to win so that his crippled sister can have an operation and walk again. In the country he meets the girl and takes a beating from his rival because he promises not to exert himself or reveal his identity. He wins the big fight against odds and goes back to the country to settle his rival.

Play Up the Fight Scenes and Use the Star's Name
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The fight scenes are exciting and certain to satisfy the average audience. If your people like the regulation stuff and do not demand very much in the way of a story then you are safe in running this one. Use the star's name and play up the prize fight scenes. If, on the other hand, your folks demand a logical and convincing story or are in any way critical then this production will hardly satisfy them.

If you decide to run it do not play it up too much but put it through as you would any program picture. In using a trailer try and show the part where the hero takes a beating and then follow it with the scene where he gives his rival the beating. What happened in between will cause them to wonder and bring them back on the show dates.

Use the posters and display the stills showing ringside scenes. The star's name and the fight scenes are your best bet.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Happiness of couple threatened when husband leads his wife into an extravagant living; a little child reunites them

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 5,200 feet

Hugo Ballin’s latest selection for Mabel Ballin is a prize story written by a Chicago stenographer, the winner of a Chicago newspaper scenario contest. It offers the star quite a suitable role and plenty of good opportunities to be appealing. On the other hand the story is not an unusual one and, in the main, not original. It promises, at first, to be an amusing satire on married life but after a while switches to more dramatic lines with the application of “a little child shall lead them” theme.

Director Ballin has provided his usual finished and artistic production. There are many splendid interior sets and he has handled the story effectively, on the whole. It is easy enough to follow except when the sub-titles make it confusing. But this can easily be remedied by titles that are more pertinent to the pictures. Harriet Underhill has succeeded in making her people talk the way people do talk—one of her pet criticisms on titles—but there are times when the titles do not mean very much, as, for instance, when the butler is taken ill, the young wife says to her husband, “Brooks has a fever. Now aren’t you glad we haven’t any children.” Another: the husband, talking to the wife says: “You are going home.” As far as the spectator knows, she is in her home. And there is a title which says the house must be quarantined, but with no further signs of the order being carried out.

The star is very pleasing and wears a fine array of pretty new gowns that will easily attract her feminine admirers. She makes the most of the role of the piquant young wife who is transformed from a simple country girl into a spoiled and extravagant woman. Percy Marmont is a good choice as the husband and the entire cast is a good one. It includes Ernest Hilliard, Dick Lee, and others.

Story: Dorothy Cluer blames her husband, Robert, for her extravagance because he wanted her to “show off” and let their friends know they were becoming wealthy. Robert objects to Dorothy’s engagements with Lord Cranston and finally threatens to leave her if she does not break with him. Dorothy has about decided to go away with Cranston when she shoots a little boy in her home in mistake for a burglar. The incident awakens the mother love in her and she adopts the child when he recovers. Robert returns to his home when he learns of the accident and the two are reconciled.

A Pleasing Star and a Good Title Your Exploitation Points

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The average audience will quite likely be pleased with “Married People” and you have a title with pretty good exploitation possibilities. You could arouse a good deal of interest by telling them about the prize story and how it was won by a Chicago stenographer. This would probably be a good way of getting them in and catchlines with the title will be sufficient to let them know what the story is about.

If the star’s previous pictures have pleased them you may be sure this one will and for her admirers display plenty of stills in the lobby. The Hodkinson press sheet contains some worth while suggestions for putting the picture over which you might do well to take advantage of. Percy Marmont is a well known leading man and his name might be used, also.

CHARACTER OF STORY . . . Stranger in western town joins “The Three Buckaroos,” the terror of the ranges, clears the place of rustlers and wins the girl

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . 4,599 feet

Fred Balshofer’s story of “The Three Buckaroos” savor slightly of Dumas “The Three Musketeers,” particularly in the three daring heroes of the story, but this one does not contain as strong or original situations as the Dumas’ story. However, it is a first rate western vehicle and probably contains more fast and spectacular riding than the majority of features of this type. The action consists chiefly of riding and it is continuous from start to finish.

The riding is splendid and sure to hold them, but it would have been effective if the director had included more fights. There is one on a precipice that offers a good thrill, but that is about the only one. Hero’s single-handed battle in the climax affords opportunity for a bit of suspense and the ruse which permits him to kill the man he has been chasing for five reels is going to please the typical “fan” audience. On the whole “The Three Buckaroos” will appeal to those who like western subjects and they’ll be sure to be satisfied with it.

The production is a good one and there are attractive and well photographed backgrounds throughout. There are also several individually fine shots that will be certain to register. Some effective tinting adds greatly to the beauty of the views.

The story consists, in the main, of the efforts of the three buckaroos and the stranger who joins them to rid their ranges of cattle rustlers, with a counterplot in which the foreman of the range tries to win the fair owner as a means of securing her fine ranch. Peggy O’Dare is a pleasing heroine and Buck Humes is capable of handling the hero role. The villain and his associates are good types. There are too many close-ups of the hero.

Story: Dartigan, soldier of fortune, joins forces with “The Three Buckaroos” to help rid the state of rustlers who are preying upon Constance Kingsley’s ranch in particular. Dartigan has a grievance against one of the rustler leaders, which is his excuse for joining the buckaroos. Dartigan has also seen Constance and fallen in love with her. Ritchie, her foreman, wants the ranch and pretends to be in love with Constance, who repulses him. How Dartigan and the buckaroos round up the rustlers, run them off the plains and Dartigan confesses his love, remains to be told.

Will Please Admirers of Westerns. Promise Action and Romance

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

With western pictures it depends very much upon whether or not you cater to a western-liking clientele. If you do you will be able to please them with “The Three Buckaroos.” If you do not, you probably cannot show them westerns at all. You can make promises for it in the way of continuous, fast and spectacular riding and if you can secure a trailer to show in advance and give them some of the more exciting combats, you can be sure they’ll come back.

You can play up the title and use catchlines. None of the players are well enough known to use their names. Display stills of “The Three Buckaroos” on horseback. For your women patrons promise a pleasing romance and tell them Peggy O’Dare is a pleasing heroine and use her picture in your lobby displays.

Some Short Reels

"One Ol' Cat"—Burr—Educational

Type of production..................1 reel novelty cartoon

Here is the first of a new series of six cartoons made by Earl Hurd for C. C. Burr and released by Educational. The cartoons combine drawn figures with living beings in a novel and interesting way. The artist draws his characters who become animated even before they are finished. A real kitten is employed and an amusing scene takes place between and a little dog that the artist has created on his drawing board. A base-ball game starts a good deal of trouble among the players and the artist is called upon to supply a good hard boiled umpire. The halls that are called and the strikes that are made will amuse all baseball fans. The animation is not only clever but will entertain the most skeptical audience. The characters are very human and very few titles are needed to explain the action. The cartoon is different from anything so far accomplished in the animated field and because of its humor and novelty should meet with a good deal of success. Not only will this new series make ideal program fillers but it will also cause many to wonder how they are made.

"Typical New England"—Urban Popular Classics

Type of production..................1 reel travel

A review of some New England towns, and coast villages are well photographed and presented in this travel number. You see the little mill at Dalton, Mass., where the paper is made for the United States’ currency. Then you pass through the main street of Lenox and into Pittsfield which is noted for its golf course. On the way to Gloucester, Mass., you pass little mill ponds and village churches. At Gloucester you are shown the fishing fleet that gets the biggest cod fish catch in the world. Natives of the village include children and old sea dogs. The reel closes with some very pretty shots of a yacht race off Marblehead. A small cannon is fired to start them off. The sails of almost a hundred craft then spread and fill with wind. The sharp bows cut the waves and dash the spray across the decks. They round the buoy, tack and gather every whiff of available breeze on the home stretch. The photography is good throughout and the entire reel filled with interesting material. It has a special Summer appeal and should do well at this time of the year.

"The Worm that Turned"—Aesop's Fables—Pathé

Type of production..................1 reel cartoon

A little novelty presenting a picture show on the screen in animated is contained in this number of Aesop's Fables. The moral brought out this time is: "Theory and practice are two different things." Harry Hippo is the chief of the animal characters. He is hen-pecked and brow-beaten and turned out of his own house by his strong willed wife. He seeks refuge in a motion picture house where he sees a number of Aesop's Fables. The picture that he sees shows a cat teasing a little worm until the worm turns and drives the cat away with a stick. Harry Hippo does not wait for the end of the show but returns home resolved to profit by what he had seen. A terrible fight follows but Harry Hippo is again thrown out by his powerful wife. The animation is up to the high standard of the series and will bring more than one laugh when shown.

"Live Wires"—Century—Universal

Type of production..................2 reel comedy

Jackie and Johnny are two messenger boys in this comedy and they are assisted by Brownie, the clever dog. One of the boys is sent for a birthday cake, but when he returns to the little girl's party it is discovered that the cake is crushed. That is about all the story that there is to this offering. The rest is merely a collection of gags which allow the dog to do his stunts. He rings the door bell, rolls on the rug, steals the children's ice cream and repeats many of his old favorites. In one part of the comedy a laugh is obtained by whitewashing a colored boy and dressing him in girl's clothes. The comedy business is poorly carried out and the gags crudely disclosed. Most of the stunts have been done many times before and have lost their laugh. This number of the Century is far below the average and will hardly entertain the simplest audience. It presents merely a collection of unrelated and unoriginal gags.

"Along the New England Coast"—Urban Popular Classics

Type of production..................1 reel travel

The quaint villages and customs of Cape Cod are the subject of this travel reel. Fishing huts, artists at work, the town crier and native Indians are all included in this varied reel. One or two marine shots help lend local color to the scene. The big trees of the Cape and the small houses are well illustrated as are also the natives at their various occupations. One of the sub-titles tells you that the district was settled in 1680 and a few old buildings are presented to prove the assertion. The reel also includes some interesting views of the Penobscot Indians engaged in basket work. The reel as a whole will make an interesting Summer program filler.

Pathé Review No. 166

Type of production..................1 reel magazine

The feature of this number of Pathé's review is a series of scenes showing harvest time in Kaffir land. The natives stand in rows and pound the grain. Another chapter of this review shows how pressed paper masks are made. The travel section shows the London Bridge in detail and the traffic that passes over it. This time the colored section shows a picturesque and medievel custom that still exists in Greece. Many brides dressed in Sunday clothes and laden with chains made of coins dance in the market place. The reel is up to the high standard set by this series and contains subjects of general interest.

"You and Me"—Century—Universal

Type of production..................Two reel comedy

Plenty of kid stuff and a little animal work are contained in this rambling comedy. It contains very little story and is almost devoid of humor. It relies wholly upon the children to hold the attention. Jealousy is the theme. Four and five year old kids are dressed as ball room vamps and act out the old triangle. To test the heroism of the young men one of the children throws her doll into the water. The real hero, a dog, saves the doll. The children are cute but they are placed in artificial and unamusing situations. This is not one of the best of the Century series and will barely amuse an average audience.
Short Reels

“The Noble Bachelor” Sherlock Holmes—Educational
Type of production…………………………………2 reel drama

“The Noble Bachelor,” is another of the series of Adventures of Sherlock Holmes. It is filled with mystery and romance. This time a titled gentleman is deserted at the altar and the famous detective is employed to help find the missing bride. Not only does Holmes find the girl but he also finds her American husband. But the English lord is not very unhappy, for this discovery allows him to go back to his former sweetheart. Holmes arranges that they all have supper together at his rooms, and he also invites the man from Scotland Yard just to prove to him that his deductions were all wrong. This number is up to the standard of the series and will hold the attention and interest of the average audience. A little comedy relief enters this number of the series with pleasing results.

“A Spirited Affair”—Star—Universal
Type of production…………………………………1 reel comedy

Roy Atwell and Lila Leslie are the chief comedians in this mildly amusing comedy built upon the bootlegging theme. This time the whiskey is stored in a large doll which is mistaken for a baby. Roy plays the role of the husband who carried a flash in his pocket. When this is discovered by his prohibition uncle he quickly adjusts a rubber nipple and says that it is baby’s bottle. When the old man asks to see the baby he is shown the doll. Bootleggers and revenue officers enter into the finish of the picture. The gags have most of them been done before and the comedy business is only mildly amusing. Roy Atwell has done better comedy work than he does in this one and has also had better and funnier stories than “A Spirited Affair.”

Out August 6th  Don’t Miss It
Eight pictures that brim with action, sparkle with humor and grip with humanness, form the current Group of Goldwyn Pictures.

Betty Compson, Tom Moore, Mabel Normand, Colleen Moore, Richard Dix, Helene Chadwick and Claire Adams are among the names for the electric lights. Rupert Hughes, Zane Grey and Gouverneur Morris are box office authors.

Every picture has exploitation angles that mean business.
S. Louis Against Hoy

Exhibitors There Refuse to Work with Him—Board of Trade for System
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
St. Louis—The St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, branch of the M. T. O. of Missouri and the national organization, has de- cided not to work with the Hoy System, an office of which was recently installed here.

The Film Board of Trade had in favor of the Hoy plan and local office had forwarded a let- ter to Joseph Mogler, president of the exhibitors' organization, inviting him to accept the services of the by office in settling all disputes among the local exhibitors and the exchanges.

A list of invited was read to the exhibitors' regular weekly meeting on Tuesday last, and it was unanimously declared to be a mistake. The Film Board of Trade is not been officially notified of the action taken and probably will not be.

Washburn with Metro
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Los Angeles—Bryant Washburn, will appear opposite Viola Dana in "Une Madness."

Atlantic Finishes Feature
"Only a Few of Us Left," made on Long Island by Atlantic Film Co., is now being made and cut. Dudley Fairly directed it.

Proctor Joints Cosmopolitan
Ralph Prior, after completing special sales work in connection with "Foolish Wives," will shortly go to coast to handle sales supervision for the Cosmopolitan Prod. in the West, at post will be similar to that held by Hal Hodes in the East and by E. M. Maxwell in the Middle West. R. Grainger will continue as supervisor of sales through Famous.

Settlement Near in St. Louis
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
St. Louis—Musicians are expected to return to work until Aug. 15, when joint arbitration board of four, two owners and two musicians' representatives will again take up wage scale. William Goldman and Spyros Skouras will represent the exhibitors. In the meantime, the owners will probably have music to cost business which has been far from satisfactory. At one time, the put down of all theaters for the summer was considered, but because exhibitor said he could not do it, the plan was abandoned.

What About It?

If you had an apple. And I wanted it. That's one thing. But if you wanted the apple. That I possessed. That would be another. And so it seems. With regard to the interchange, of pictures. Between Germany and America.

The tariff tax is under discussion. In America. And there may come a difficult tax. Especially with regard to German made pictures. Why? Because the claim is made. That pictures can be made in Germany. Much cheaper than in America. So much so. That Herr John Emerson, President of the Actors Equity. Which includes all of the important stars in America. Says that there must be a heavy tax. On German made pictures.

To prevent American producers. From making the bulk of their product. In Germany.

Now that's one apple.

AND HERE'S THE OTHER

Now Germany has an exactation. That but 20 per cent. Of film imports. Approximately. Can be shown. Which means. That only about 70. Or at the best. About 100 American features. Can be released. In a year. And this means. That the bulk. Of American pictures. Will not be shown in Germany. For years. All of which is very pretty. If Germany wants it that way. But—it is a considerable but—does Germany want it that way?

Because—and you can see the other apple now—if they do. And this present idea is continued. It will mean. In all probability. That German made productions. Will be taxed. In the customs. From 40 to 50 per cent. Not ad valorem. As in the old tariff. But 40 to 50 per cent. On the value. Of the product. Based on American production costs. In other words. If a production cost a million marks. When made in Germany. And if it arrives in America—if the present plan is carried out—then it will be assessed. On what it would have cost. If made in America. And if the assessors figure. That if made in America. The production would have cost say 20 million marks. The tariff of from 40 to 50 per cent. Will be levied. On the 20 million. In other words. From eight. To ten million marks duty. Practically doubling the cost.

SOME PLANS FOR A CHANGE

Some well posted film folk. Tell me. That there is a possibility. Of a change. Being made. In the existing conditions. If so—well and good. If not. There may be difficulties. But it will seem. To be good business. If there could be. An interchange. Of product. So that the world market. The international market. Could be so wide open. So free. That all good pictures. Could be shown everywhere. With the least possible difficulty. And at the lowest possible cost. To the exhibitor.

GERMAN PRODUCTION

From the advertisements. In the trade publications. It would seem. That the trend of German production. Still main- tains its old level. And this type of production. Will not do.

To Handle Fox Educational—One a Week Beginning August 1—Re- editing 120 Features

The educational department of Fox will release 52 educational and in- termediate films next year, begin- ning August lst.

One hundred and twenty features in the Fox catalogue are being re- edited for non-theatrical use. Additions will be made from time to time.

More Fox Offices

The Fox organization is negotiating for the establishment of a company in Germany to handle its distribution there. John Olsen and Co. have signed for the product in Norway, Sweden and Denmark, and the Societa Anoni- ma Italiana Film Comitato Cinematografico di Rome for Italy, the Bal- kans, Egypt, Palestine and Syria.

Postponing "Toilers of Sea"
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Los Angeles—In all likelihood, "Toilers of the Sea" will not be Rex Ingram's next picture. He may do a story of the sea, but it will not be the Hugo story. That will be made at a later date.
What About It?

Generally speaking. For America. For instance, Lucrezia Borgia is being completed. And I understand. It has cost considerably. It has not been my pleasure to see it. But if it is the story. Based on the historical data of the Borgia family. The producers might well know this: That an Italian production. Along the same line. Entitled "The Last of the Borgias," Was shown in America. Some time. And unless something has happened. Since left New York. None of the important American distributors wanted it. It was too heavy. Too tragic. And without sufficient light touches. Yet it was excellently made. And splendidly cast. The historical type of picture. Is—except for something very unusual—particularly wanted in America.

STRAWS SHOW

The way the wind blows. Perhaps there is a straw visible. In the plans of the EFA. To take Pola Negri to America. Some time in August. For an indefinite stay. Gossip has it. That Pola will be given an American director. And will make modern pictures. That is to say. Pictures of which the American likes best. Nothing historical. Nothing heavy. It may be some time. Before Pola returns to Berlin. And the same way. Lubitsch. When he visits America in December. He may remain indefinitely.

Ruth Clifford Going to Japan

Los Angeles—Ruth Clifford is going to Japan to make two pictures or more for a newly formed company. Public Doesn’t "Shop" Says Post

The Evening Post declares the public is not "shopping" for good pictures. As was stated by W. W. Hodkinson at the convention of the General Federation of Women’s Clubs at Chautauqua recently.

The Post says, "Mr. Hodkinson goes on to say that people are ‘shopping’ for motion pictures. Are they? Observation indicates that only a few. Comparatively. Insist upon knowing that a picture is worth while before viewing it. Most persons go to motion pictures only a week or even two or three times a week. As a matter of habit. It is considered a cheap form of entertainment. Although entertainment that doesn’t enter- tain is dear at any price. It is useless to urge such persons to rebel at such pictures. They will have to be educated. It is up to the minority to rise in wrath against these crimes committed in the name of art. A little busy shouting from individuals and organizations can do much to hamish tawdry films.”

The Tube System

is a marked improvement over the tank method of developing motion picture film—as great an improvement as the tank method was over handling the film by hand.

At our Flushing laboratories we develop, fix, tone, tint, wash, and even DRY film by the Tube System. This means perfect prints, for every step of the slow progress of the film through the tubes is watched by experts. It also means absolute cleanliness, for it is not necessary to touch the film. And it means long life to the positive, because the dying is accomplished not by drums that stretch the film, but in washed air of the right temperature.

Every motion picture producer should read what Expert Keyser, Equipment Editor of the Moving Picture World says about our Tube System on pages 381-382-383 of the July 29th number of his journal.

Exhibitor Combine

To Distribute in Northern California—C. C. Griffin A Prime Mover in Scheme

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

San Francisco—C. C. Griffin, president of the M. P. T. O. of Northern California and an executive committee member on the national board, is one of the prime movers in the formation of the Western States Film Exchange, Inc., recently incorporated at Sacramento with a capitalization of $30,000. The remaining incorporators are Alan E. King, of Oakland, P. J. Hanlon, of Vallejo, Mrs. E. Smith of Marysville and Robert A. Hazel of San Francisco.

About 50 Northern California exhibitors have subscribed to the stock. At an early day, many of these exhibitors will be elected and the plan of operation outlined. There will be an exchange here and another in Los Angeles. While it is true that this exchange plan will eliminate all advance bookings and other practices of distributors against which exhibitors usually object.

Lawyers Busy

Standard Contracts in Their Hands—May Be Several Weeks Before Signing

The negotiations covering standard contracts are now in the hands of the attorneys for the exhibitors and the Hays office. The whole matter has apparently simmered down the phraseology of the terms and the ironing out of what are said to be only minor difficulties.

It may be several weeks before the National Exhibitors Association is formed and the Hays office will not hold up the conferences in any way.

Music Again in St. Louis

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

St. Louis—Members of the Music Commission turned to the work in the local picture theaters Friday night. All the difficulties with the theaters have been satisfactorily settled, at least until Aug. 15th. The men went back to work at the scale of wages prevailing on April 30, when the old contract expired. However, until Aug. 15th the theater owners will be permitted to employ one or more musicians, as they see fit, in the 'inside' theaters. This ruling does not apply to airdomes.

Temporary Set-Back

Amendment on Free Screen Expected in Missouri—First Bill Defeated 8 to 2

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Jefferson City, Mo.—The committee on bill of rights of the Missouri Constitutional Convention has, by a vote of 8 to 2, voted down A. A. Speer's bill to broaden the constitutional provisions guarding the rights of free speech, free press and the rights of peaceful assembly to include films on the screen.

Several days ago C. C. Pettijohn, personal representative of Will Hays and Martin J. Quigley, editor of the Exhibitors Herald, appeared before the committee and spoke in favor of the Speer bill. They urged that moving pictures be placed on the same footing as newspapers. It was thought for a time that the bill had a good chance of being recommended by the committee, but the reformers have been very busy during the past few days, pulling all sorts of political strings to stop the efforts to protect the industry.

The committee later held another hearing and Speer and Charles D. Morris of St. Louis, president of the Joseph Gazette, who is a delegate to the convention supported the measure. But when it was put to a vote it received only two votes.

It was considered for a time that the industry's chances in Missouri were excellent. As a matter of fact, it is understood that the industry had a foreboding of some kind being considered and will be introduced shortly before the convention. Friends of the industry here still hope to have the matter come for debate before the delegates.

Newspaper Opinions
"Borderland"—F. P. L.
Rivoli

TIMES—There is photographic charm + + and yet it is in part due to the photograph that the picture seems illogical. In other words, the charming scenes please the eye but are not convincing.

HERALD—* * * bears several points of contact with the Norma Talmadge photoplay ("Smilin' Through"). Because she suggests so much a Madonna, Miss Ayres looks extremely beautiful in the scenes of the borderland, enhanced by a hint of S. Mona Lisa smile.

N. Y. WORLD.—Not only because "Borderland" + + gets away from the customary hocus pocus of motion picture stuff do we say GO and see it, but also because it is, in our judgment, a rare example of cinematic playmaking.

TRIBUNE.—One of the most interesting pictures of the year. The thing which amazes us above all other things is the vast improvement in the work of Agnes Ayres + + +. The theme is an extremely interesting one and has been beautifully worked out + + +.

AMERICAN.—"Borderland" commands commendation. For simplicity of theme, for originality in development, for flawless presentation it comes close to classic + + +.

EVE. TELEGRAM—Agnes Ayres + + + is at her best. Despite the fact that she is called upon to play the three leading roles, Miss Ayres was equal to the occasion. "Borderland" is filled with many dramatic situations and rich imaginings, and before the pretty climax is reached the audience was given thrills and chills. However, it was not without humor.

SUN.—Spiritualism, sentiment, large dash of melodrama and splendid acting and direction—all these are blended into a curious, but at times exceedingly impressive picture + + +. Emerging from it with the highest honors are the director, Paul Powell, who has done the best work of his career; the star, the lovely Agnes Ayres, and that unknown soldier—the photographer.

EVE. JOURNAL.—It isn’t the star, though the star is Agnes Ayres, that makes "Borderland" so good a picture and it isn’t the support, though Milton Sills is leading man, nor the splendid photography. It’s the story and the direction.

GLOBE.—* * The picture has its great moments. At times it grips at the heart and most certainly does carry home the point it intends to make.

Thematic Cue Sheets, New Idea
N. J. Mintz and James C. Bradford have formed the Cameo Music Publishing Co., and are making what they term "thematic music sheets." These, they state, differ from other cue sheets in that the actual notes are given so that the musician can make a correct substitution should he not have the exact compositions in his library. It often happens that when the names of proper selections only are given, and when the musicians haven’t them on hand, they make substitutions which do not fit the theme. Among the companies using the Cameo sheets are First National, Vitagraph, Associated Exhibitors, Select and United Artists.

Ferndale Studio Again
According to the N. Y. World, Mrs.
Harriman and Deaconess Virginia C. Young, co-custodians with Mrs. N. Willis McFadden of Chistus de Profundis, the carrying of a head of Christ on a bean for a shrine for which the public subscribed, are seeking to learn from Mrs. Mc-Fadden, what had been accomplished against securing its story. It was announced that it would be filmed by the Clear Stream Film Corp.
The World refers to the Ferndale Film Studios, Inc., and says "Mrs.
McFadden was secretary, but was asked to resign and was succeeded by Miss Orrin G. Hawley, former movie star. Mrs. Harriman was vice-president." The article then states that Mrs. Harriman has resigned.

Ferndale, in November, 1920, was reported as having purchased a tract of land at Brookhaven, in Suffolk County for a studio and last October again at Ferndale, near the Yaphank army camp. At the time several of the buildings were said to be completed.

New Hoy Pact
T. O. C. C. Will Probably Renew Contract with Two Changes in Rules—Brandt Gives Figures
The T. O. C. C. will probably renovate its agreement with the F. I.
L. M. Club and the Hoy Reporting Service, with some changes in the existing contracts. One change will be the elimination of the exchanges on play dates when such dates appear on contracts purchased by ex-Film Producers, the other regarding the obligation of a new owner of a theater to observe contract whenever service is rendered by the preceding owner.

Billy Brandt, former president of the T. O. C. C., and one of its prime figures in the negotiations of yesterday called the figures on what has accomplished in New York through the joint through which the decisions of the board should be carried out.

In the Courts

The Fox Film Co. has been sued for $15,000 damages by Clementine Simpson because while walking in the street she tripped over a pipe leading to a camera owned by the defendant which was taking pictures on West 42nd St. in front of the Lyric, which was unable to see the pipe on account of a blinding glare created by the defendant for the purpose of taking the picture.

Alleging that he has lost money in picture theaters James J. King of 408 48th St., Brooklyn, has applied in the Supreme Court for an allowance of $4,500 a year for three sons from the estate of a relative. The estate was left by King’s sister, who inherited him. He contested the will, but a settlement was made by which he gets the income from a trust fund of $40,000 and a debt of $30,000 for a loan to invest in the theater at 342 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn. This venture proved a failure, King said, not only for pictures but for burlesque shows he presented there later.

TIMES—There is one genuinely poignant moment in the story, as it is, that includes many needle-piercing speeches that are so often useless, and it is often incredible, and, as a whole, can hardly be tolerated, and it is very convincing. It's a pity that this is so, for even for those who love realism, this is a real motion picture.

HERALD—* fails to be as convincing as it perhaps should be because the whole production, while well done, because its pivotal point hangs on a unison in the minds of two people to translate the same into picture. Such instrumental performances in the movies are never credible.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* is a promising picture for its wit, for its sense of humor, and for the success of its cast in carrying off the characterizations.

AMERICAN—* held the attention of the house with a story that is not often seen in the motion pictures, and the manner in which it is told to the audience. The acting of the cast is excellent, and the story, although a trifle long, is well worth the time spent in watching it.

SUXT—* is an appealing love story that is told in a way that is not often seen in the motion pictures. The acting of the cast is excellent, and the story, although a trifle long, is well worth the time spent in watching it.

EVE JOURNAL—About once every year a picture comes from the Pacific Coast, by thought of those who make it, to be the man of the year, and it is not to be hurried. There are no tricks in this one, and the story, although a trifle long, is well worth the time spent in watching it. The acting of the cast is excellent, and the result is a consummate effort that entertains immeasurably.

HERALD—* Carey's chief idea for depicting a situation is upon, and to shift his somberness, the American director take the same material, but to show the story as an up-to-date adventure in acting back in the days. The elements have now been updated in "Hurricane's Gal," and the result is an effort that entertains immeasurably.

Two Fines Imposed

In this case the company made application to the commission for a license for the picture, and eliminations were ordered. It was claimed that the eliminations were not made at the time the exhibition took place. First National received suspended sentences in two cases. In one it was charged that on March 21, the Camerex exhibited “The Railing,” although certain eliminations that were ordered by the commissions had not been made.

In the other case it was charged that on April 29 “Slinkin Through” was exhibited at the Strand in Manhattan and Brooklyn, and in theaters in Syracuse and Buffalo, without duplicate licenses being procured, although one permit was requested and granted by the commission.

An attorney representing First National said that an employee had been responsible for the violation, who had since been discharged and that it was the intention of the company to obey the law implicitly. In all of the cases the companies pleaded guilty.

Marion Davies in “Little Old New York”
By Rida Johnson Young
Directed by Frank Borzage Created by Cosmopolitan Productions
Released January 8, 1923

This play ran an entire season on Broadway. The picture will have the backing of the Hearst magazine and newspaper advertising. It is one of the screen’s greatest romantic novelties.

Frank Borzage, director of “Humoresque,” does his finest work in this. Marion Davies fits the part to perfection and a Cosmopolitan cast of favorites appears in support. The settings, of course, are by the celebrated Joseph Urban.

New Hoy Pact

the committee by theaters complaining against exchange exhibitors have recovered $67,000. Exchange brought 1840 cases against exhibitors from whom they recovered $367,000 in judgments. One exhibitor lost a $25,000 case against a certain exchange, through the working of the joint committee.

Hoy doesn’t mean a thing to me. Hoy is merely the servant, the physical means through which the decisions of the distinct arbitra-offboard, which mind you, has an equal representation from both exhibitors and exchanges are enforced. It is true that the Hoy service has blacklisted certain exhibitors. Those exhibitors deserved it because they did not carry on their business in a fair manner.

And Brandt then went on to recite how the unfair business tactics and lack of judicial buying on the part of many exhibitors results in hardship to others. He said that distributors have come to realize that despite contracts for service entered upon by exhibitors, a certain percentage never plays the picture, because that percentage has over-bought itself. For that reason, Brandt argues, distributors are forced to jack up exhibition values in other places in order to secure what they feel is the proper revenue from their product.

And Brandt, who has always more or less reflected the official workings of the T. O. C. C. mind, is of the opinion that his organization will review with Hoy because it has found the service extremely satisfactory. The fact that the Hays organization is entirely opposed to the Hoy system will, in all likeliness, have no effect on any negotiations with the T. O. C.

New Georgia Bills Would Censor Pictures and Film Advertising—5% Luxury Tax Proposed

(Washington — The Federal Trade Commission has set down for two o'clock on Wednesday, the final argument on the "Black Beauty" case, in which the Collins Day Harris Feature Film Co., of New York is involved.

The commission in this case charged that the Eskay Edison company released an old Edison picture titled "Your Obedient Servant," under the name of "Black Beauty" without advising the public of the old title. It is also charged that they used false and misleading advertising by holding out and representing the picture to be the "Black Beauty" story written by Anne Sewell.

The attention of the alleged violation was brought before the Commission by Vitagraph, which released "Black Beauty" as a special. Gaylord R. Hawkins will appear for the Commission.

The Herald describes the process as follows:

"All the natural hues are all fixed on the reel, it is said, including blue, which has generally been represented in all mechanically colored films heretofore by a dark green. The film requires no special apparatus for projection, but can be run through a machine at a small nickelodeon as easily as through a projector at a big Broadway film house."

From other sources, it was learned yesterday that Pat Casey of the Pat Casey Vaudeville Agency is interested in the company and that the bankers involved in the promulgation of the plan are James B. Colgate and Co.

An effort was made to reach Felix Feist yesterday to ascertain in what manner Joseph M. Schenck is interested. He was not in his office most of the afternoon.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—Manager H. Levy of the Garden put his street advertising signs for "Scrap Iron" in the most natural place in the world and consequently where they were least expected—on a truck of scrap iron. The copy also used institutional advertising, simply mentioning the fact that the fans could always expect a good show at the Garden.

Streator, Ill.—Showmanship will do it! This being the tale of Ed Scheibel, old-time "rep" minstrel, and one man, will surprise you here. It so happens that Streator is on the main line of the Sante Fe and trains from the Coast have five and ten minute stop-overs in this town. Any time a Paramount star is coming through—either from Chicago or from the Coast, Ed is there. Then "tips" off the local newspapers and both of them get honest-to-gol dern interviews with the celebrities in person. Thus, Ed cashes in for each star interviewed always grabs plenty of space.

Muskegee, Okla.—The manager of the Palace, has recently become a father, and has three men friends who have also become parents lately. Taking advantage of this, the enterprising manager invited the other three fathers to join him in a parade, in which they all four wheeled their baby buggies down the streets for the two evenings "Is Matrimony a Failure" played. Each carriage had a banner containing one of the words of the title.

The four young men were all well known in Muskegee and consequently aroused but only curiosity, no interest, but got a lot of laughs as well.

Portland, Ore.—Trouble found help in "Trouble" when the First National attraction starring Jackie Coogan played at the Liberty, and several hundred youngsters of impoverished status benefited by the showing and exploitation. The management staged an old clothes matinee with the showing and seven hundred children turned out for the special nine o'clock show, heaping piles of castoff garments in front of the theater. The event was staged in connection with the work of the city's Public Welfare Bureau and secured the backing and endorsement of leading citizens. Aside from the civic and philanthropic angles of the affair and judging it purely from a showman's angle, the Liberty gave away 700 ten cent admissions and received in return more than four columns of publicity in the daily papers. The front of the lobby was a hand-painted cut-out combination reproducing a scene from the picture, a policeman bending over young Jackie and the dog. The background of washlines and tenements with skyscrapers in the distance symbolized the story.

An inexpensive result-producing stunt used on "Young America," consisted of a printed manilla envelope that contained a tiny American flag. The flags were purchased at a local novelty store at 50c per gross. Seven gross means 1008 flags. The stunt was used in three different houses, and the 2,000 flags for each house proved to be well worth while. Figuring flags at $7, and the envelopes per thousand, here was a little throw-away that costs $15. It was conceived by Julian M. Solomon, advertising manager for the Haring & Blumenhal New Jersey theaters.

Utica, N. Y.—An unique exploitation stunt was arranged by Nathan Robins, prior to the engagement of "Hail the Woman" at the Avon. Two ex-service men, a soldier and sailor, were engaged for this stunt. The soldier was placed on the sidewalk in front of the Utica National Bank on the busy corner, and the sailor was placed diagonally across the car line on the roof of a building. These men started wig-wagging signals at each other at about one o'clock in the afternoon. After continuing for about 15 minutes, the man on the street walked back to a sign painted on a regular window envelope which had been rolled up. The sign read: "I am signalling the man up there to 'Hail the Woman,' Avon Theater." The sailor on the roof at the same time displayed a large banner, also advertising the production. This stunt attracted enormous crowds and was continued until nearly four o'clock in the afternoon, being stopped after blocking traffic several times.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A tie up with the street car company and attractive displays with retail merchants in front of the theater featured the exploitation campaign for "Smilin' Through" at Shea's Hippodrome.

Buffalo has raised platforms at the most important street car stops, these being roped in. Attached to the ropes were placards for the "Smilin' Through" campaign that read: "Drive Carefully and Go Smilin' Through. See Norma Talmadge at the Hippodrome." The warning served for pedestrians and motorists alike. Tie-ups were arranged with music dealers and resulted in half a dozen prominent window displays. The front of the Hippodrome was done over to resemble an English garden trellis with vines streaming down the sides of the trellis, which had the appearance of double doors—the doors being those leading into the theater. One thousand of the trellis advertising the film were placed on public phones. The entire campaign was conceived and executed inside of 48 hours.

Henry F. Gilbert, the American composer will arrange the musical score for "Down the Sea in Ships."
Can’t Arrange Deal

Harris, Says Owner — Broadway Managers Turn It Down

M. Becker, secretary of Asta Pictures, Inc., which control “Hamlet,” Asta Nielsen for this country, has written a lengthy communication to James Spearing, motion picture manager of the New York Times, in which he answers the latter’s query regarding what has happened to “Hamlet.”

In this communication, Becker frankly admits that he has been unable to arrange any sort of a distributing deal. He blames this delay on the intelligence of the foreign agency distributor, and suggests the location of a number of territorial distributing units under a central control, which would book pictures in all theaters “solely for the purpose of giving service to the members of the local producers, and benefit their distributive facilities and should not be operated for profit.”

If Mr. Hays, says Becker, “is in favor of his reformed policy in connection with theForeign Motion Picture industry, or has plans to move in that fact that so extraordinarily rapidly.”

Abe Stern Is Back

The Stern has returned from the holidays and two weeks will return to Hollywood. His brother, Julius, is expected shortly.

Sennett Leaves for Coast

Jack Sennett yesterday left for Colorado after a protracted stay in New York. He intends launching another feature some time next month.

Local Exchanges Meet

A number of independent local exchanges met yesterday in the offices of Harry A. Alexander Film to discuss the current situation. There was nothing of any definite nature decided. It was merely a get-together to discuss present conditions and the outlook were gone over.

Sign Hurlbut

Lace Prod., charted in any with a capitalization of $200,000, will produce three plays by William Hurlbut, according to Harry Nic Heecher, the general manager. Production will be in New York, with John E. Shea as president and J. Montford Adams, vice-president.

Legal Advice on One Clause in Standard Contracts Desired—Affects Workings of Hoy

The one important factor that seems to interfere with the actual signing of the standard contracts between the Hays office and the three exhibitor bodies involves the interpretation by a legal mind of a clause in the agreement as drawn.

This clause, it is understood, deals with the arbitration plan as agreed upon and involves the legality of the Hoy Reporting Service, to which the Hays office is formally opposed. Whether Mr. Hays will stop off in Colorado on the way East from Los Angeles, is problematical at the moment. It seems fairly certain that no contracts will be signed until his return to New York.

Sydney S. Cohen yesterday, in a statement, made public a letter sent to him by Hays in which the latter said:

“arbitrage negotiations are progressing favorably, and I am hopeful of a large fulfillment. While the attorneys are at work on these matters I am going to take the opportunity to go to California for a few days to fill some engagements made some time ago. This absence, however, will not in any way delay the negotiations, and stop any return. Also, I believe that the details will be brought to a point where we can quickly conclude the matter.”

As a prelude to the letter, Cohen urged theater owners to proceed with the closing of contracts for next (Continued on Page 2)

Bucking Loew in L. A.

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—Sam Harris, of Ackerman and Harris, has been here confering on the advisability of opening a vaudeville and picture house. Nat Holt, formerly with Marcus Loew has resigned, as noted, and will act as Southern California representative for A. and H., who are said to be considering a theater in Denver.

Short Reel Deals

Hodkinson to Handle Two Bray Series—Pathé Gets Two Groups from Hal Roach

Two distributors have just concluded arrangements for additional short reel product to add to their fall line-up. Hodkinson has contracted with J. R. Bray to make 26 one reels for next season. Pathé has arranged with Hal Roach to continue the “snub” Pollard comedies, but in two reel form, and has taken on a new series of “Our Gang” comedies, each in two reels.

The Bray deal with Hodkinson calls for a guaranteed series of 13 one reels. The first will be called technical romances and will be released every other week beginning Sept. 17.

Pollard has been appearing in one Reel for Pathe for some time. His two reels will be released every four weeks, beginning in September. "Our Gang" comedies will be 13 in number, and in them children and domestic animals will appear.

England Holding Up Professionals

The Fox offices yesterday stated that work on "If Winter Comes," so far as Ann Forrest is concerned, may be cut up because the English authorities are putting up a barrier against the importation of foreign actors and actresses to work in films made in Britain.

"Hate" Suit Dismissed

When the suit for an injunction restraining Metro from exhibiting "Hate," on the ground that the name belongs to the Fairmount Film Corp., which released a picture of the same name in 1917, came before Supreme Court Justice Lydon, no one appeared in the case and it was marked off the calendar.

88 Deputy Censors for Ohio

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Columbus, O.—It is reported here that a bill to be introduced at the next session of the legislature will provide for a deputy censor in each of the 88 counties of the state. This is one of the several bills, which are said to be planned against the film industry.

Director of Education Riegel is understood to have rescinded all voluminous censorship and ownership passes issued by Mrs. Evelyn Snow. It was alleged by exhibitors that the passes were merely a way to gain admittance to the theaters and not for the purpose of reporting on the pictures shown.

Test Cases On Music

M. P. T. O. Says It Intends Bringing Them—Organizing Special Music Department

The M. P. T. O. yesterday stated it had caused a number of test cases to be brought in court to ascertain the right of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers to charge exhibitors for the use of the music of its members. It was also stated that there will be additional cases, in the courts in various parts of the country.

It is the intention of the M. P. T. O. to form a special music department and issue scores to its members, free from tax. A number of conferences have been held with music publishers in order, so the exhibitor statement goes on to say, to put the new department on a "firm and effective basis."

It will be recalled that the Lampert bill amending the copyright law on music, which was introduced in the House of Representatives, was dropped.

Devlin is a former member of the State Railroad Commission and a former Superior Court judge.

Ten More Offices

American Releasing intends opening eight more exchanges. These will be located in St. Louis, Salt Lake City, Spokane, Oklahoma City, Portland, Ore.; Omaha, Charlotte and New Orleans, Arkansas will be more for Canadian Releasing, making a total of five in Canada.
In the Courts

Frank L. Packard, author of the story, "The Iron Rider," has sued the Columbia Studios Corp. for $2,500,000, because Fox bought his story and agreed to give his name as the author, but when the picture was issued under that name, it was not his story, although his name appeared as author. He said the story was pictured as "Smiles and Triumphs."

A series of judgments have been filed in the Supreme Court against F. X. J. Stevens, of Chicago, by persons who bought stock in Talking Pictures, Inc., from her under an agreement that she would buy back the stock at the price she paid for it. She refused to do so. Edmund Wolcott has a judgment for $2,200 on twenty clyogs. Robert S. Rochbach has a New York offer for $10,000 on fifty shares and a note for $5,000, and Frederic C. Lebuscher gets $1,108 on ten shares. Lebuscher says he has been unable to sell the stock at any price because the corporation is in bankruptcy, and the stock is worthless. He is attorney for the receiver, and states that the schedules in the U. S. District Court list the liabilities at $120,000, while the official report of the appraisers states that the assets are worth only $2,095, and there are unsecured claims of $3,375. He thinks the valuation of the appraisers is too high.

Films to Show Steinach Operation

According to an article by Arno Dosh-Fleurt in the New York World from Berlin, two pictures showing the manner in which the Steinach operation stimulates the heart will be issued. One of these will be for scientists, and the other for the public. For over a year and a half, the films have been in the course of preparation.

Pictures Help in Sound Study

Pictures showing how to execute their yells were shown to students at the Columbia University summer session by John Mills, re- resentative of the trouser manufacturer's Mc- tric Co., who was lecturing on "Recent Advances in Long Distance Tele- phonics" with screen illustrations. He demonstrates a speaker, the construction of which is accomplished, with a project- ing machine called a stereopticon-optical enlarger, which is believed to be the first of its kind. The light beams are then projected upon a moving picture screen and appear in the form of voice waves, varying in intensity, amplitude and direction, as the human voice itself varies in tone, vowel and consonant sounds.

Without photographs of the voice waves as they are transmitted electrically over a telephone circuit to light, the straight track on which the mirrors move are then projected upon the moving picture screen and appear in the form of voice waves, varying in intensity, amplitude and direction, as the human voice itself varies in tone, vowel and consonant sounds.

Summer days are dandy days, and the best of all dandy pictur- ing pictures are "FREN- HEELS," which IRE- CASTLE Leone returns to the screen with the most cinetating any of new gowns and novel st- ever thrown on the silver-shine.

"The kind of picture," says the Daily, "that your women patrons 'eat up.'"

Give your audiences a summer-gram of light, cheerful entertainment. It's too hot to get worked up by heavy, sensational pictures. "FRENCH HEELS" takes us to Fifth Avenue to a lumber camp in North Woods. The lake shots are so grand, you'll bring a breath of the cool out- doors into your house, and IRE- CASTLE's danc- ing will reflect what is in the minds of nine tenths of your au- dience.

"Her admirers," says the Motion Picture News, "will find plenty over which to enthuse."

"FRENCH HEELS," the Exhibitor has a value PLUS! If you haven't played it, Book it this Summer, while appeal is greatest.

"THE THIRTEEN OF THE REGIMENT"

Well! What Do You Think of This?

Amusement Editor of the Wichita (Kas.) Beacon addresses Stanley Chambers, owner of the Miller Theatre, asking him to bring back a picture for a second run because he thinks it so good everyone should see it. Read his statement and Mr. Chambers' answer, both published in The Beacon.

Mr. Chambers, It's Up to You!

DEAR MR. CHAMBERS
I SAW YOUR show at THE MILLER last night
AND I WANT to tell YOU LORD Tennyson MISSED a lot by DYING before he saw
"ONE CLEAR CALL" for IT IS EASILY the best PICTURE that has been HURLED ON A local SCREEN in many moons
AND ANY man that can WRITE a poem that would INSPIRE SUCH a picture DESERVES to live and SEE it and Mr.
CHAMBERS DON'T you think
YOU COULD bring it back SOON AGAIN, maybe to
THE PALACE, for there are TWENTY thousand people in WICHITA who would like TO SEE IT and there ARE EIGHTY thousand who SHOULD SEE it, and see
IT SOON.
I THANK YOU—J. D. D.

Mr. Chambers Comes Back at Mr. J. D. D.

MR. J. D. D.,
THE BEACON,
WE WANT to thank you
FOR the kind appreciation
OF "ONE CLEAR CALL."
WE AGREE with you
THAT everyone should HAVE SEEN IT.
AND IT WAS for this REASON that we told THEM IN our advance
ADVERTISING that it WAS ONE OF THE BEST PICTURES EVER shown here.
WHICH proves that you CAN ALWAYS depend on MILLER advertising.
TO THOSE who failed
TO SEE this great picture
WE EARNESTLY recommend THAT THEY visit the MILLER today or tomorrow
WHERE a remarkable program
OF SCREEN and musical
FEATURES is being offered.
IT WILL help them to FORGET their disappointment.
THANK YOU.—S. N. C.

Hays to Speak at L. A. Athletic Bowl—Many Attend Ambassador Dinner

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—Will Hays will address the athletic club of Los Angeles at a monster meeting to be held at the Hollywood Athletic Bowl today. It will be the first time since Mr. Hays entered the industry that he will deliver an address direct to the public, whose co-operation on behalf of the industry he is so anxious to secure.

The Ambassador dinner, of Wednesday evening, has made an impression. Film men here cannot recall any other instance in the motion picture history of the city when so many well known figures in the business were gathered at one place.

Rupert Hughes was toastmaster. Many speeches were made by the mayor and Capitola, and Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, lauding the part films have played in (Continued on Page 2)

the development of Southern California.

Mr. Hays' address was along the lines of his previous speeches before the M. P. D. A. in New York, the joint meeting of the civic associations at Watford, the General Federation of Women's Clubs in Chantauqua, and the N. E. A. meeting in Boston. He again recited the article of incorporation of the M. P. D. A., and called his audience "his partners in industry." The aims of the organization were distributed on printed slips to the guests. He predicted that some of the men and women before him would eventually have monuments erected in their honor, and because of the efforts they are putting into their work.

The keynote of his today's address will be a plea to the public not to consider him as the dictator of the motion picture business, but rather as one of the few working with the important parts of the business and not commanding them. He said that before he came to Hollywood he thought he knew something about the business, but that now he had discovered that what he didn't know "had filled enough books for a library."

Society, as well as the film industry, are making joint efforts to make his stay here a pleasant one.

Censors Restrict Films, Says Times

Commenting on the statement made by Will Hays in Los Angeles, that optimistically tells "censorship will fail in everything it undertakes;" the Times says editorially:

"It has restricted the field of possible motion-picture production, already narrowed by limitations of the producers—aud of the public. It has enabled reformers to enjoy the sensa-Cirion of aggravization of the ego and to gratify the instinct for persecution. Finally, the published decisions give us all a heightened self-esteem by enabling us to think how much more intelligent we are than others."

Short Reel Charts

All producers and distributors, who release nationally, are urged to forward to THE FILM DAILY the following information for inclusion in the Short Reel Edition, out Aug. 6th.

Releases from Jan. 1 to Aug. 1, 1922, giving brand or series name, title of individual picture, length in feet, type of picture whether comedy or scenic, star, producer's name and release date.

A second tabulation covering 1922-23 releases should contain series of short reels with number of pictures in series, length, star, if any, how released and how often.

Making Appeal for Fair Play

Attorneys for Jack Pickford have sent communications to the various newspapers in New York asking for fair play in connection with the Pickford-Marilyn Miller marriage and the revival of the naval scandal in which Pickford was involved. Pickford's attorneys have in their possession a letter from Sidney W. Brewster, now retired but former judge advocate of court martial for the Third Naval District, in which Brewster offers his aid in correcting the erroneous impression which has been created as a result of newspaper articles.

Under date of June 22 in a second letter Brewster has written Pickford in which he says that instead of criticism in connection with the grazing ring during the war, Pickford should receive commendation for turning over the evidence in his possession.

The latter's attorneys also have in their files photographic reproductions of Pickford's naval discharge in which he is recommended for re-enrollment.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Cincinnati—Additional interest in "The Crossroads of New York" was aroused here, when Wm. A. Clark, publicity manager for the Strand and Roy H. Haines, First National exchange manager, put on the first tie-up with the Times-Star, which presented a mimic comedy produced by local talent and titled "The Crossroads of Cincinnati."

As a result, the picture and First National broke into the Times-Star daily for more than a week. An appeal was made through the newspaper for local amateur comedy talent to participate in the making of the picture. They were told to report at noon on a certain day at the Strand, at which time and place the cast for the picture would be selected. In advance a little work was done, and persons of popularity and prominence were induced to appear in the picture. W. W. Silberstein, president of the Chamber of Commerce, the executive secretary of the Chamber, and the head of the Underwriters' Salvage Corp.

Various points of interest were used as locations for the film and as much as possible the story was played on the screen from day to day of the parts of the story to be filmed, hundreds of persons who work otherwise have learned from the Strand. "The Crossroads of New York" followed the cameraman to the various locations, watched the shooting of the scenes and catered to a desire to see the completed picture. The local film was shot in three days and was shown on the screen within a week after work had started on its simultaneous release with the Sennett feature.

Sandusky, O.—George Schade, manager of Sandusky's new and interesting example of decorating a theater front in holiday garb. The only discrepancy was that it wasn't a holiday reality, but simply in honor of the Elks' convention.

The fact remained that it paid him, as it will pay others to watch for these special events, because the visiting Elks came to recognize Schade's as the gathering place for entertainment. The Elks sized lobby card was hung under the marques, facing three ways, and the roof was decorated with flags and buntings.

Brockton, Mass.—More than 300 children under 12 years were interested in the Rialto and "Beauty's Worth," through the prize contest conducted by Manager J. C. Cahill, the Brockton Enterprise Newspaper and John McConnolly, Paramount exporter from Boston. The contest consisted of making the greatest figures out of words out of spelling "Marion Davis—Beauty's Worth."

The children were assisted in making up their lists by brothers, sisters, and parents, so that the stunt was productive of interest and the title widely circulated. The winner was presented with the doll on the stage Saturday night, but the theater was jammed to the doors with a large hold-out for the second performance. The prize went to a 12-year-old girl, who managed to find as many as 6,752 words, and another girl got 3,266 words.

Butler, Pa.—The lyric and a local hardware store tied up to present each groom of the month with a round-end safety-razor, and each bride with a comb, as part of the exploitation for "Is Matrimony a Failure?"

The safety-razor was being demonstrated in a corner drug store window, and the lyric got a good display there. This window had a demonstrator who naturally drew crowds. It was all part of the "Save Matrimony" campaign of the Robinson, Pittsburgh explorer, who also repeated how to tie up with the marriage license bureau at the court house. He put a sign up, stating that during the showing of the film each bride and groom of the next month would be invited to the theater upon presentation of this marriage license.

Robson also tied up with the Rock Agency, who loaned a brand new limousine which they dressed up for a wedding party with old shoes, rice, white ribbons, etc., in their tradition as though they had just been married. This paraded the streets before and during the run. Rolling pins were tied all around the window of the theater with white ribbon festoons and a banner telling of the safety-razor and the Robinson. When it was off, a man dressed as a farmer went around painting display windows which were given for tips. He put his name on with his paint, but by his antics.

Des Moines, la.—In his all around campaign on "Trouble," the manager of the Des Moines, used the street ballyhoo of a laborer carrying two connected tin signs in the shape of a dumbbell. The first read: "Even a Dumb Bell Knows a Good Picture when He Sees One!" The second followed up with: "He Says It's "Jackie Coogan, etc.""

The dumb bell lived up to his name by refusing to answer any questions and simply pointing to the sign upon being interrogated. The newspaper display ad: "Don't go near the window at 607 Walnut Street, or you'll run into a trouble. Jackie Coogan, etc., directed an essay contest on why one liked Coogan in the film, and inasmuch as the participants decided a trip to the theater, the Des Moines gained by it.

Augusta, Ga.—At a cost of $15, Manager F. J. Miller, of the Rialto, increased his receipts approx $175 a day for the two day run "Pay Day." The cashier's boots were contrived into a construction cab and the pay role side was a cutout of Charlie concerning money, and on the wall the sign "No Loafer." "Help Wanted" NoSmoker. In the lobby was a cutout of Charlie holding up his basket. A real umbrella was laid to the cutout's hand and by means of a hose, carefully concealed behind the window, water poured over the umbrella dripped off the edges. During run a wagon with odd sizes of posters paraded the streets advertising the picture, and a cowbell and basso helped draw attention to the bally.

Terre Haute, Ind.—The telephone operators announce "Smiling Through," was given a special angle when the picture opened at a local theater. Manager Bringer had a switchboard set up prominent retail store window, had two operators make the calls there. In the window was a sign which announced that they were announcing that film, and during their introduction an attractive display was made. A crowd gathered on the sidewalk to learn what it was all about. It was Bringer's idea to advertise his picture just right along with the picture, and the theater proffited by his initia tion for the attraction became a byword.

Catskill, N. Y.—Manager Ed Esterman, of the Community, tired stunt that got the old photos gage a mile. It built up gage for "Her Husband's Trademark."

His townsmen have their picture taken with Gloria Swanson, and place Reid, instead of getting a donkey or posing before a canvas. Silberstein tied up with the stunts, supplying lighter cut-outs of various popular stars taken from Paramount and three others. The novelty was in having to see "Her Husband's Trademark," thrown in premiums. The studios came along with a co-operative window newspaper ad.

A Fine Entertainment and One of the Few Good Ones

Dorothy Phillips in “HURRICANE’S GAL”
Allen Holubar Prod.—Asso. First National DIRECTOR .................. Allen Holubar
AUTHOR ................... Harvey Gates
SCENARIO BY .......... Harvey Gates
CAMERAMAN .............. Bryan Haskell and Wm. McGann

AS A WHOLE.....A fine entertainment and excellently produced picture; well worth seeing and one of the few good ones

STORY ........Contains interesting situations and good dramatic moments; unusually well handled

DIRECTION ......Skillful and intelligent at all times; gives story an A1 production in every way

PHOTOGRAPHY ............ Excellent
LIGHTING .................. Excellent
STAR ........Attractive, photographs beautifully and does her best work in quite some time

SUPPORT ..........Wallace Beery always a good performer; Robert Ellis first rate leading man; a marvel of a baby and a clever monkey deserve mention

EXTERIORS .......... Delightful marine views
INTERIORS ............... Good
DETAIL ..................... Good

CHARACTER OF STORY .. Daughter of contraband goods smuggler, carries on father’s work until love reunites her with sweetheart she believed had exposed her to the law

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......7,944 feet

Allen Holubar’s latest production starring Miss Phillips, is one of the few current releases that are well worth seeing and anyone who appreciates a good picture will surely want to see “Hurricane’s Gal.” It isn’t so much the fact that Holubar had a whopper of a story when he went to work on it, but it’s what he has done with it. He has provided a production that not only classes him as a skillful director, but displays just plain intelligence in the handling of what are sometimes just ordinary situations.

Harvey Gates’ story gives Dorothy Phillips a role not a great deal unlike that which Dorothy Dalton had in “Moran of the Lady Letty.” She is a sort of feminine “Sea Wolf,” rules her crew by right of will, and dares the revenue men who watch for vessels transporting contraband goods. Miss Phillips, with her hair bobbed, is ideal as Lola. She is tempestuous and calm in turn and both in the scenes where she dominates the mate and the rest of the crew, as well as those in which she fondles the babe whom she finds, she is appealing and thoroughly convincing.

The supporting cast is a good one. Wallace Beery always makes a great villain and he’s never more at home than when he’s carrying on his treachery aboard ship. Robert Ellis does very good work as the hero and Gertrude Astor is satisfactory. A good bit is done by William Fong, the cook, and genuine heart interest touches come through the appearance of eleven months old Elliot Howe, a truly wonderful babe. A clever little monkey contributes some of the comedy business, particularly where he steals the baby’s milk and drinks it.

There is some fine action in the picture, especially in the sequences aboard the sailing vessel. There are fights, the shipwreck and the storm that brings the story to a climax. The storm scenes are unusually realistic and well done. The cameramen have certainly done fine work in every way. Some of the marine views are really beautiful and one or two wonderful sunset effects. The airplane shots are the real thing and wholly interesting.

Story: Lola inherits the ship which her father had used for smuggling and continues in the illicit trade. On one journey she finds O’Connor, a stowaway aboard. The boat is wrecked by revenue officers whom Lola believes were warned by O’Connor. She assumes he went down with the ship and her conflict of love and hate for the man is finally overcome by love when she eventually finds him alive.

If They Want Good Pictures, Here’s One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The above is only a meagre outline of the plot of “Hurricane’s Gal.” There is a great deal more to it and much more interesting than space will permit a description of. It is a picture that you can put down on your list right now and if your folks aren’t satisfied with it, there’s something wrong with them, not the picture.

“Hurricane’s Gal” contains action, heart interest, romance and thrills—everything that goes for good entertainment and as far as production is concerned, it ranks with the best. You can make promises and feel sure the feature will bear them out. Promise a fine performance from Dorothy Phillips and do your best to get them in. They’ll surely be satisfied. A trailer would be certain to bring them back. You won’t go wrong in booking the picture.
Good Action and All Around Satisfying Western

Harry Carey in
"THE KICK-BACK"
Film Booking Offices

DIRECTOR ..................... Val Paul
AUTHOR ..................... Harry Carey
SCENARIO BY ................ George Edwardes-Hall
CAMERAMEN................. William Thornley and Robt. De Grasse

AS A WHOLE...... Good desert western that should go big wherever they like either the star or western pictures in general STORY...... Very suitable vehicle for star; plenty of action of the sort that carries suspense and usually draws applause DIRECTION...... First rate; just a bit slow at first but builds towards exciting finish that will please them
PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Good
LIGHTINGS .................. All right
STAR....... Punishes the villains that plot against him as he never did before; does his usual good work SUPPORT ...... Henry B. Walthall and Chas. Le-Moyne good as the bad men; Ethel Grey Terry fair as Carey's sweetheart EXTERIORS...... Appropriate; some fine long shots
INTERIORS ............... Few
DETAIL ...................... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Herdsman plot to secure ranchman's place which contains coveted water hole, but are foiled in all their schemes
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 5,260 feet

"The Kick-Back" is a thoroughly satisfying western picture that will go big with the many ardent admirers of western subjects and the star's following. Carey has written the story himself and he knows best what he can do and what he does best, so it isn't strange that in "The Kick-Back" he has a role that suits him particularly well and supplies him with the right kind of opportunities.

The one feature that is always obvious in the stories that Carey writes for himself is that he never strives to make a great hero of himself through the rescuing of others. It is mostly a case of saving himself from those plotting his ruin. There is one rescue in this in the climax where the villain is kidnapping Harry's girl and hero rescues her. But this is one of the bits of action that will please them.

Val Paul has gotten a good deal of suspense into the picture and succeeded in keeping the spectator in ignorance as to what will happen next. In this way the interest is well sustained and he works toward the climax gradually and with increasing speed, but you don't know until the very last minute who will be the victor. In spite of the fact that in reality you haven't a doubt but what Carey will win and everything will end sweet and pretty, you are kept guessing. Paul has done very well with the story in distributing the action once he got started. He takes a little while to get into his plot at first, but once he does, it moves along at a good pace.

Carey's escape from jail will surely get over. He uses a ruse to bring the keeper into his cell so that he can knock him out and escape. Also his second escape furnishes a good thrill and the entrance of the U. S. troops gives it a patriotic flavor that will be sure to get applause.

Story: White Horse Harry refuses to sell his ranch to Aaron Price, who is anxious to secure it because it contains a water hole. Price decides to take it away from Harry and when the latter takes his cattle across the border, he is jailed for having forged permits—the work of Price. After a certain length of time Price puts in a claim for Harry's property, but Harry, his escape aided by a little Mexican girl, returns and kills Price's accomplice. He is jailed, but his sweetheart helps him to get away. She is kidnapped by Price, but Harry follows, rescues her and Price goes to his death when his machine topples off the cliff.

Play Up Star's Name and Appeal to Western Fans

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here is a good bet for all the western fans and for Carey's admirers. If you cater to folks who like western pictures or know they like Harry Carey, you can be sure you will please them with "The Kick-Back." You can promise plenty of good action, enough fights to satisfy anyone and several first rate thrills.

Use Carey's name prominently in your notices and it would be a good idea to show them a trailer which would include the shot where Walthall pushes Carey's hand from the rope he is grasping and sends him into the pool below, or else the one in which Carey rescues the girl from Walthall. You can promise them a good live western and they won't go wrong on it.

Marie Prevost in
"THE MARRIED FLAPPER"
Universal

DIRECTOR ......................... Stuart Paton
AUTHOR .......................... Bernard Hyman
SCENARIO BY .................... Doris Schroeder
CAMERAMAN ....................... Jackson J. Rose

AS A WHOLE.............. Pleading light entertainment that has well sustained interest and appealing star

STORY......Up-to-date comedy drama that gives star ideal role; affords good amusement

DIRECTION......Satisfactory; story moves along in even tempo with auto race working up to climax

PHOTOGRAPHY ..................... Very good
LIGHTINGS ............................. Good

STAR......Does good work and is splendidly photographed

SUPPORT......Kenneth Harlan well suited to role of flapper's husband and Philo McCullough convincingly villainous; Lucille Rickson in a grown-up part

EXTERIORS......Good; especially those of race track

INTERIORS ......................... All right

DETAIL ................................. Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY......Young girl follows example of a married flapper and gets herself and her model into plenty of trouble

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,862 feet

Most of the recent Marie Prevost features that Universal has been releasing have provided a first rate light, and suitable summer entertainment. "The Married Flapper" is another that fits in admirably for your hot weather program. It is bright and contains enough so-called "pep" to make it a thoroughly pleasing number and it is the sort of material that is particularly well liked by the younger element—the "flapper" crowd.

Bernard Hyman's story makes a fully appropriate vehicle for Marie Prevost and gives her a role that she knows how to handle. She's just as appealing in this and wears some more good looking clothes; is well photographed and pouts just a little more than she should in close-ups. Kenneth Harlan is a new leading man for the star and well suited. Philo McCullough is the young wife's tempter and convincing so while Lucille Rickson gives up her "kid" role and becomes a sub-flapper for the occasion. The cast is a good one.

There are some familiar situations that are nevertheless interesting and well handled. The idea of the wife endangering her own happiness to protect the name of her husband's niece is one of them and the auto race which makes up the climax, is not a new one either. It is highly improbable that a girl could compete in a big race without someone knowing it at the start but anyway it furnishes a pretty fair thrill and gives the director a chance to work up a bit of excitement for the conclusion. Universal takes the opportunity to advertise its weekly by having the Universal Weekly man photograph the girl driver after she wins the race.

Stuart Paton gets the most out of the situation in the climax and brings about the happy ending without beating around the bush. The scenes on the track are very good and the cameraman has gotten in some interesting shots.

Story: Pam Billings is "The Married Flapper," her husband being Bill Billings whom she adores, but insists that she retain her numerous other friends. Bill loses his money but Pam is not a quitter and they plan to earn their own living. Bill trains for an auto race in which he hopes to win $25,000. Meanwhile, Kingdon, an admirer of Pam's persuades her to join a party and when she refuses, invites Bill's young niece, a flapper who aims to pattern herself after Pam, to his apartment. Pam follows to take the girl away. How Bill finds Pam at Kingdon's and how Pam later wins Bill's race for him because his arm is broken in a fight with Kingdon, and they live happy ever after, completes the story.

Exploit the Title and It Should Bring Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can be quite certain that your folks will like this one. If you have shown them any of the star's recent features and pleased them, you won't have any trouble satisfying them with this one. Just use her name prominently and display plenty of stills in the lobby. Tell your women patrons she wears some more pretty clothes in "The Married Flapper."

The title is a good one and should prove a very popular one. It can be effectively exploited and you can be assured your own local "flapper" crowd will be on hand if you broadcast the name of the picture and the star. Catchlines can be used and there are plenty of exploitation stunts suggested by the title. You can have your ushers, if girls, togged in flapper attire,
Snappy Action Saves Unconvincing Production From Average Class

Dustin Farnum in "OATH BOUND" Fox

DIRECTOR .................. Bernard Durning
AUTHOR ..................... Edward J. LeSaint
SCENARIO BY ............ Jack Strumwasser
CAMERAMAN ................ Don Short
AS A WHOLE.............. Plenty of action though at times quite confusing and complicated without reason. Some thrilling marine shots

STORY........Not over original and contains usual film situations. Keeps offering in average class DIRECTION........Does well with material at hand but loses ground in attempt to make mystery and conceal identity of thieves
PHOTOGRAPHY........Uneven. Some shots out of focus and some splendid motor boat and yacht racing scenes LIGHTINGS .................. All clear
STAR...................... Hampered by story. Has had better parts SUPPORT ..................... Adequate EXTERIORS .................. Very good
INTERIORS .................. All right
DETAIL ..................... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY........ Millionaire discovers that his own brother is connected with boat robberies and his wife's brother proves his innocence by showing his secret service badge
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,468 feet

"Oath Bound" takes its name from the fact that the young wife in the offering has sworn not to disclose the information that her brother is in the employ of the secret service. This leads her husband to suspect that both his wife and her brother are connected with the gang of river thieves. Circumstances only complicate matters but in the end all is cleared and the brother of the rich man is discovered to be aiding the gang. The weakest point in the whole production is the oath; for as both her brother and husband were anxious to capture the thieves the knowledge of her brother's identity would only have aided the capture and spared a lot of unnecessary complications.

Lots of action and a constant shift of scene help hold the attention. In fact the plot and acting are secondary to the motor boat and yacht races. Director Durning kept things moving at top speed and did fairly well with the material at hand. He scored best in the action scenes but did not help simplify the story. He too thought it necessary to hide the fact that the rich man's brother was a thief and make you believe that his brother-in-law was a criminal. Not an atom of suspense would have been lost if the audience were put wise. And had this been done a lot of confusion would have been avoided.

Dustin Farnum hasn't a very important role to play and does not come out very well in the end. He is brave and strong and has all the other earmarks of the typical hero but is badly misled in the matter of judgment. He suspects his innocent wife and her brother while he fails to believe the guilt of his own kin. The sudden twist at the end causes the hero and his hired detectives to appear very foolish. He is supported by Ethel Gray Terry, Fred Thomson, Maurice Flynn, Norman Selby, Eileen Pringle and Bob Perry. The entire cast do good work but a greater contrast in types would have reduced the confusion.

Story: Rich man who owns a transatlantic line is greatly disturbed by thieves who rob his boats. A private detective gathers evidence that implicates his wife and brother-in-law. The young wife being under oath refuses to tell anything regarding the thieves. An exciting chase, using fast motor boats and a hydroplane, discloses the fact that the rich man's brother has been aiding the thieves.

Action Scenes and Boat Races Will Please

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The action scenes and the boat races are certain to please any audience. Use Farnum's name but do not promise too much in the way of a story. It might also be well to explain the title so that your public are not led to expect a production built upon the lines of "Earthbound." Tell them a little about the plot so that they may know what to expect.

A trailer showing the motor, boat races and some of the yacht scenes will help attract and advertise the offering. Use stills, posters and catch lines containing the title of the picture. Although there isn't very much of a story to brag about there is plenty of action that should hold and satisfy the greater majority of your patrons. The action is your best talking point.
Star Plays Three Roles in Offering That is Novel Though Morbid

Agnes Ayres in “BORDERLAND”
Paramount

DIRECTOR .................. Paul Powell
AUTHOR ..................... Beulah Marie Dix SCENARIO BY ............... Beulah Marie Dix
CAMERAMAN ................ Harry Parry
AS A WHOLE.............. Well staged production based upon morbid theme. Star and direction good. Some very unusual and artistic shots

STORY........ Has hardly enough material for a feature production. Main action takes place in a flash-back

DIRECTION.......... Splendid at times but allows things to drag badly

PHOTOGRAPHY......... Very good. Some splendid photography

LIGHTINGS ................... Good

STAR........ Does good work in triple role representing characters of several generations

SUPPORT........... Good throughout. Cast includes Milton Sills, Fred Huntley and Bertram Grassby. Attractive children do some very natural acting

EXTERIORS .................. Good

INTERIORS ................. Well furnished

DETAIL........ Adequate. Titles a bit too preachy

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Woman about to run away with lover comes to her senses when she hears the tragic story of her grand-aunt “Borderland” takes its title from a place where restless spirits of the dead travel on and on throughout the ages. The evil may not rest, nor may they take comfort in death until their unfinished work on earth is done. The star takes the part of the restless spirit who desires to warn her less experienced grand-niece and prevent the latter from running away with her cousin-in-law. But in turn she also plays the parts of the niece and grand-aunt.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... 5,486 feet

While the story does not contain enough action for a full length feature it nevertheless has many points of interest. Great care was paid to detail and little touches giving the production as a whole, finish and smoothness. The screen technique is good and all loose ends have been gathered up, but some of the detail is a little overdone and, having very little bearing upon the story, is only apt to divert the attention. The barn dance is one of the scenes that could stand a little cutting. Its purpose is only to show that the servants were not home when the fire broke out. One or two flashes would have been sufficient at this point in the picture. Several other places could with advantage be taken up.

Director Powell has done well with the material at hand. He has held his players in check and achieved some very pretty scenes with the child actors. His footage ran a little long but that should have been corrected in the editing.

Agnes Ayres is well suited to the complicated triple role that she takes linking two generations together in similar situations. Her work is satisfactory throughout. The entire cast is cooperative and plays with restraint. Both the photography and lighting are well up to Paramount standards.

Story: Young wife in love with her husband’s cousin, decides to elope. On the “Borderland,” however, wanders the ghost of her great-aunt, who paid the penalty of a similar mistake with her life. Through the medium of an old servant the spirit tells the story of her tragic elopement just in time to prevent another ruined life. The young wife gives up her lover and returns to her husband and child.

Star’s Name and Ghost Theme Should Attract

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Agnes Ayres has a large following and her name should be used in your advertising. Tell them that the star plays three different roles and that the picture contains two separate stories of two generations. Lay stress upon the supernatural but do not lead them to expect that this is another “Miracle Man,” for it is not. If you use catch lines you might ask: “Can the dead communicate with the living? See how the ghost in ‘Borderland’ warns her niece.” Do not promise too much in the way of a story but treat the picture more as a novelty and you will have little difficulty in putting it over. Talk about the children and promise them splendid kid stuff, for in this they will not be disappointed. You can also say that the photography and special sets are well up to the Paramount standards.

CHARACTER OF STORY........ Love and duty theme. Old Indian confesses and saves brother and sister and Royal Mounted

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,944 feet

"The Broken Silence" is one of James Curwood's Canadian Northwesterns. It is filled with action and situations. It runs along smoothly and holds the attention up till the very end. It contains nothing very original or novel but offers a satisfactory Northwestern a little above the average.

The interest is held by the action and situations. It is difficult to foretell how it will all come out in the end. The story contains all the necessary elements. It has action, revenge, romance and a dramatic climax. Added to this you have some good Northwestern out door shots with plenty of snow and dog sleds.

Little time is lost between the situations. The dramatic events follow one another in a logical and consecutive manner. The atmosphre of the Northwest is well represented and the steam that comes from the actors mouths when they talk add the necessary feeling of cold to the picture. The dogs, sleds and huts all add to the realism of the drama.

Zena Keefe does satisfactory work in a very active role. In the cast are included Robert Elliott, Gypsy O'Brien, Roy Gordon and J. Barney Sherry. Joseph Depew does a fine bit of acting in a plucky little juvenile role.

Director Henderson kept the action in the foreground but allowed his cast to overact. He has managed, to keep things moving and did well in his choice of locations and realistic effects. The photography is clear and for the most part straight stuff. One or two long shots are recorded in an effective manner.

Story: Cameron Bruce, an officer of the Canadian Royal Mounted is in love with Jeanne Marat. Her brother returns home and tells Cameron that Jeanne is his wife. He did this because many years ago their mother and father were both killed by a Royal Mounted; and it is for this reason that the brother and sister came into the wilds. The chief of the police has long been troubled by visions of his evil deeds and while confessing his crime to the priest he is killed. Jeanne and her brother pack their belongings and travel northward. Cameron is ordered to go get his man. He is divided between love and duty and helps them escape but all three are captured. An old Indian then enters the post house and declares that he did the killing. The Indian escapes and all ends happily.

Will Satisfy Northwestern Fans. Use Curwood's Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Broken Silence" is a little above the average Mounted Police production and will satisfy those who like Northwestern pictures. Use Curwood's name in your advertising and exhibit stills and posters showing the snow scenes. These scenes should prove particularly attractive in the Summer months.

Give them some idea of the story but do not tell in advance who killed the chief of police. If you show a trailer try and get the scenes showing the dogs fighting and the girl trying to separate them. Mention some of the members of the cast and tell them that the hero was torn between love and duty.

You can safely promise them a red blooded production that will hold the attention and prove a fairly satisfactory entertainment. Decorate your lobby with snow-shoes and other properties that indicate Northern wilds.

"THE YOUNG DIANA"
Cosmopolitan Prod.—Paramount
DIRECTORS ............... Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola
AUTHOR .................. Marie Corelli
SCENARIO BY .......... Luther Reed
CAMERAMAN .............. Harold Wenstrom
AS A WHOLE ........... Interesting theme of "Eternal Youth" holds attention but fails to convince. Very artificial; a studio production throughout.

STORY ............ Has the typical Corelli combination of science, imagination and romance. Ending disappointing.

DIRECTION .............. Good for the most part. Ice carnival scenes padded and not in keeping with rest of production.

PHOTOGRAPHY ............. Very, good especially the laboratory scenes. All shots clear.

LIGHTINGS .............. Good, but not over-interesting.

STAR ............. Does fair work but is not at her best. Wears many novel though unbecoming gowns.

EXTERIORS .............. Very few.

INTERIORS .............. Over-decorated and stagy.

DETAIL ................... Good.

CHARACTER OF STORY ........... Scientist returns youth to old maid who becomes rage of Europe but is unhappy just the same. Happy ending comes when you learn that it is all a dream.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 6,744 feet.

"The Young Diana" has a strange combination of old time Victorian chivalry and modern scientific romance. It is typical of Marie Corelli's novels with plenty of imagination and the usual agreeable love story. Marion Davies has a very interesting role. Particularly effective is the change of her makeup, which shows her as an old maid after a lapse of 20 years.

The directors have procured some good results, but the production as a whole is stretched beyond capacity and not over-convincing. It is almost entirely studio stuff, and while it has a good many romantic and mystic qualities, it is handled in a very realistic manner.

The great point in the drama comes where the old maid has her youth returned to her through a scientific discovery. The laboratory scenes are particularly effective. Then comes the conflict between "The Young Diana" and her former lover and she realizes that the return of youth does not bring back her lost happiness. The end of the production is very disappointing because it all turns out to be a dream. Dreams make very effective material for the screen, but are very apt to make the audience feel that they have been tricked into believing something that is not so.

The directors have done some very good work in handling a small but effective cast, but they have allowed a little over-acting on the part of the star and have also allowed her to divert the attention from the story to her many curious gowns. The settings are credited to Joseph Urban and he has secured some interesting effects, but they neither suit the story nor the characters and for the most part they look the paper and compoboard that they are made of.

Story: In an English setting, Diana May, the pretty daughter of a social climber, is about to be married to a titled naval officer. At a party the night before the wedding, she sees her fiancé leave the house at midnight with another woman. Believing this to be an elopement, she faints. The rest of the story is what she dreams. She dreams that twenty years have passed and that she has become an old useless spinster. She reads an advertisement in a magazine and travels to Switzerland, where she visits an old friend, a scientist, and here she consents to allow him to experiment with his new light. The treatment lasts twenty-four hours, after which her youth is restored. Then "The Young Diana" becomes the social attraction of Europe. She is torn between the love of her former sweetheart and that of the Doctor, who has restored her youth.

The climax comes when she realizes that the return of youth did not bring back with it the happiness that she lost twenty years before. In the end she is awakened from her dream and her lover explains why he ran out at midnight. The production ends with the conventional wedding ceremony.

Names of Author and Star Are Your Best Drawing Card

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Young Diana" will certainly hold the attention of any audience, but it is not likely to prove any sensation. Your best talking points are the author's name, the star's name and the theme of eternal youth. The strange mixture of romance and mystery will attract many, but when they find out it is all a dream, they will not be over-enthusiastic about it.

Behind this picture is the publicity of the producers, and also that of the Hearst newspapers. You know what the star has done for you in the past and can let that be your guide. If she has a large following in your vicinity you are very safe in playing this one. This production will not add to her reputation.

Use stills and the effective posters that go with this production. Also tell your women patrons that Marion Davies wears some very novel gowns in this offering. The cast is good and should also be mentioned.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Five outlaws kill girl’s father and secure the map of the lost gold. Hero, reformed hobo and sheriff do a round-up
LENTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,000 feet

"The Angel Citizen" just rambles along. It drags along through the usual western situations. It is sprinkled with a little riding, shooting, fighting, deception and the usual love interest. It contains very little worthwhile action and the situations are far from convincing.

No attempt was made at characterization or anything out of the usual rut. The stars compete with each other for the center of the screen and manage to divide the attention of the spectator. As soon as one theme is exhausted another is entered upon merely to give the necessary footage and hold off the final climax.

Franklyn Farnum plays the role of a young city chap who wanders west in quest of excitement. He loses his train at a junction station and takes as his pal a hobo who was thrown off the train. Together they fight and defend the girl whose father has become the victim of bandits. To complicate the situations you have a stage robbery with the girl trapped in the runaway coach, an eastern doctor who is very jealous of his wife and suspects the hero, and a secret map which shows where the gold is hidden.

Al Hart takes the part of the sheriff while Shorty Hamilton does fair work in the hobo role. The girl is played by Peggy O’Day.

The director failed to keep things moving in a set course. The action seems to run all over the lot and get nowhere. He has done fairly well with his climax scenes and staged some good fights, but the moment they are over the interest drops. The stars have been allowed a little too much overacting. The camerawork has helped add realism to the climax scenes but the sets and props have been seen too often in this type of western to be of very much interest.

Story: Two strangers in town defend the girl from the unwelcome attentions of the gang leader. This starts a fight at a dance and leads to many strenuous situations. The girl’s father is killed and his secret map is stolen. Then the two heroes are appointed deputy sheriffs and the man-hunting scenes begin. All ends well after the big climax which has been stretched to the limit. The last shot shows the hero driving away with his bride.

Won’t Do If They Like Live Westerns

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This production might have done for an average two-reeler but with all the padding and stretching it will hardly do if your folks are used to good live westerns. The main fault of the production is the story. It attempts many things and accomplishes very few. The action is buried under a mass of slow-moving unimportant detail.

If the stars are well known among your patrons and you decide to run this after you have seen it first then your best bet would be to use the stars’ names but soft pedal all the way through. Do not promise anything in the way of a story for if you do you are likely to disappoint them. If you must say something then tell them about the runaway stage and the fight scenes. Use stills in your lobby and run a trailer showing some of the climaxes. But above all see it first. You know your people best and you will know exactly what you can do with it after you have seen it.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Efforts of Indian Prince to punish the man who stole his wife's love and subsequent perils of many concerned

People with extorted imaginations might fancy such a story as that offered in the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation’s latest offering, but it is quite doubtful if the normal mind will find much entertainment in “The Mysteries of India.” Probably those who favor serials and are accustomed to things that are more or less improbable will be equally pleased by the thrills offered here even though there is seldom either sense or logic associated with them.

The picture is poorly constructed and considerably below the standard of the better made foreign product. A good deal of attention has been given where it is not wholly essential and spared where it might have improved the offering. The director has provided numerous elaborate settings representing the palace of the Indian Prince and so far as the spectator is concerned they are possibly authentic and make the production fairly spectacular. But if he had concentrated more upon developing his story and showing some obvious attempt to make his story even slightly plausible, his efforts would not have been quite so in vain.

The story carries little suspense despite its mission as a mystery and while the magic of the Yogi Ramgani may mystify, more often it has a tendency to amuse, especially in instances where he merely has to look at a telephone wire to cause it to break away from the phone, thus frustrating the effort of the heroine to communicate with the hero, and again when, through the same magic, the tire rolls off the taxi and once more prevents a communication of the couple.

There are several climaxes and the last is the least thrilling. The hero has carried the Princess, whose life is threatened by her jealous Prince, to safety across a rope suspension bridge. Hero’s wife is still on the opposite side and instead of crossing the bridge to safety herself and then cutting it to prevent the Prince’s troops from following, when she sees them coming she remains on the danger side and cuts the rope. Such are the inconsistencies.

Story: Eshnapur, ruler of India, commands Langland, a chum from his college days, to build a tomb in which he intends to imprison his wife for her unfaithfulness. Langland refuses and is held prisoner. His sweetheart follows and after numerous adventures the couple are reunited and the Princess makes the sacrifice by jumping from the cliff.

Depends Altogether Upon the Class You Cater To

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is possible that there is a market for a picture such as “The Mysteries of India” but it will have to be with folks who are not hard to please and more likely with the cheaper class of audience that accept thrills, regardless of their nature, in preference to most anything else you could offer them. The better class of patrons, those educated to better pictures, will hardly accept it.

The exhibitor knows best what he can do with a feature of this type and he is the only one that knows his particular clientele. Where it is to show, the title can be exploited and any stunt advertising, either in the way of a costumed “Yogi” or teaser throwaways, should be enough to get them in.

Some Short Reels

"Hope"—Triart Productions—Hodkinson
Type of production...............................2 reel novelty

"Hope" is another of the splendid series of Triart Productions inspired by famous paintings. The productions are artistic, well acted and ably directed. "Hope" is based upon the well known painting of the same name by George F. Watts. Mary Astor plays the role of the beautiful daughter of the light-house keeper. She marries Pierre a fisherman and is launched upon a life of care and trouble. Her father dies. Her husband's enemy steals into the tower and extinguishes the light. She loses her home and is forced to live with her mother-in-law. Pierre has gone to sea and the time for his return has long passed. A child is born—and hope alone survives. At last Pierre's boat is sighted. The villagers run to the cliff in time to see the boat take fire and sink. A small boat is quickly launched and sent to the rescue but it returns without Pierre. In the middle of the night the shipwrecked sailor clunging to a spar is landed upon the beach. He staggered home and joins his little family. Hope has conquered. A good deal of attention has been paid to detail and atmosphere in this little classic. The photography is very fine and the lightings are interesting. The action moves smoothly and the direction, which was done by Lejaren Hiller, is artistic and pleasing. "Hope" is well up to the high standard set by the former Triart Productions, "The Beggar Maid" and "The Bashful Suitor." It was well received in its premier run at the Capitol on Broadway and should do well anywhere, especially before artistic and critical audiences.

"Record Breakers"—Sport Review—Goldwyn
Type of production...............................1 reel novelty

Here is another Sport Review edited by Granitland Rice and Jack Eaton. This time the camera records college field events and illustrates many of the sports in slow motion. High jumping and pole vaulting are particularly pretty when shown in slow motion. The entire reel is full of action and holds the attention from start to finish. Hurdling, relay races, broad jumping, shot putting and throwing the hammer are all shown in turn. The titles call your attention to the various events, employed in executing the events. The photography is good and the slow motion work amusing. The reel as a whole makes a satisfying novelty that should do well on any program.

"Hello Mars"—Century—Universal
Type of production...............................2 reel comedy

Harry Sweet, Johnny Fox and Alberta Vaughn are the chief players in this Century Comedy. The comedy business centers around a home-made aeroplane and a trip to Mars. Harry and Johnny lose control of the machine and find themselves landed on Mars. They are surrounded by beautiful girls and cave men. According to the laws of the land they are unable to leave the planet before paying their income tax. Johnny takes a job peddling goat's milk, while Harry becomes a barber. In the end they discover that it was all a dream. There are not very many gags in this Century comedy. It depends mainly upon the novelty of the situations to gain its humorous effects. Harry Sweet has done much better work. The production, as a whole, will amuse but mildly and entertain only the less critical type of audience.

"The Stone Age"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production...............................1 reel comedy

Here is one of the very best Hal Roach has done. Snub Pollard plays a boat man role, and Marie Mosquini takes the part of his wife. No explanations are needed. The picture tells the story. Snub drives down the main street in his cart which is pulled by an Antediluvian rhinoceros. The traffic cop stops him, and with the aid of a mallet and chisel carves him a stone summons. Snub gets out of the difficulty and climbs into his cave dwelling. Here the comedy is taken up by Marie, who does the role of the cavemen's wife. Complications arise with the janitor of the building and a fire in Snub's apartment. The cave man's fire engine is very funny and should bring more than one laugh from an audience. Marie saves her own child from the fire, and the bad man is driven into the woods by an elephant. Good natured satire and special gags prompt a good many of the laughs in this novel comedy. The strangeness of the setting causes the gags to take on a special humorous twist. The comedy business is all well done and will prompt a laugh a minute. The picture was well received when shown on Broadway, and brought laughter from a hyper-critical audience regardless of the hot weather. This one is a sure bet and will do well on any program.

"The Hour of Doom"—Universal
Type of production...............................2 reel western

Tom Santachi is the hero of this melo-dramatic western. The story tells about a murder and a circumstantial evidence conviction. The romance is between the innocent prisoner and the sheriff's daughter. The action comes when, with but a few hours to live, the hero is let out of jail by the sheriff's daughter. He seeks real murderers but they escape. In the meantime a mob attacks the sheriff for allowing the prisoner to escape. The hero fails to capture the murderers and returns to jail saving the sheriff from disgrace. A minute later a railroad detective brings in the real villains and the hero is freed. The usual clinch closes the picture. Typical of most of Tom Santachi's westerns, the action is good and the direction well done. Whatever defects the production may have are mainly due to the story and its development. The good people are awfully good, and the bad men are terribly bad in all of this series. There is no in-between. People are beginning to desire to see things a shade nearer the reality, with characters more human and heroes less goody-goody.

"Busy Bees"—Rolin—Pathe
Type of production...............................1 reel comedy

The cast of this Rolin comedy includes Sunshine Sammy, Paul Parrott, Mark Jones and Ethel Broadhurst. The fun comes from an escaped convict who sets loose a box of bees and turns them upon an old fashioned camp meeting of colored folks. Prison guards pursue the convict and discovers his disguise. A good many of the gags in this comedy have been used before, but the comedy business is well done and will bring more than a few laughs. Little time is lost between gags and the whole production kept moving at a snappy pace. It also contains some sure fire laughs which will please the average audience.

Pathe Review No. 167

Type of production ........................................ 1 reel magazine

A special feature of this number of Pathe Review is the chapter called “The Dancing Climate,” which show natives of the Samoan Islands indulging themselves in exotic dances. Large numbers of natives take part in these ceremonial dances and keep step to a syncopated rhythm. The nature section of this number of the review shows some close ups of the trapper plant of South Africa. This plant lives by trapping insects. Life on a barge forms an interesting chapter, while the travel section takes you upon a personally conducted tour to Yellowstone Park. Here hot springs and geysers are illustrated. The review is filled with interesting subject matter, and will hold the attention of the average audience. It is up to the high standard of the series.

“Two Men”—Universal

Tom Santschi is the star and hero of this melo-dramatic two reeler. But this time he does not marry the girl in the end but plays the role of the sacrificing ward who gives up his adopted daughter to the man she loves. But before this climax comes he saves the young man from an angry mob. The girl does her part by nursing the young man back to health and the bad man arrives just in time to allow the sheriff to prove that he is the guilty person. This does not happen, however, before he attempts to attack the girl and puts up a stiff fight and thus supplies the necessary western action. “Two Men” is built along regulation western lines and will please Santschi’s admirers and western fans.

Ohio Exchanges Agree to Co-Operate—Talk of Political Coup in Columbus
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Columbus, O.—Twenty-five exchange managers, many salesmen and exhibitors of Ohio, accepted the invitation of Hon. M. Riegel, head of the Division of Censorship and met in the house of representatives chamber here Friday.
Riegel's two hour talk to the "distributors" was full of the words "co-operation" and "get-together." Riegel, it will be remembered, is the man responsible for the Riegel-Snow censorship, but at the meeting he tendered the exchange managers the olive branch.
Political circles here are rife with the comment that the Ohio censor chief, on the eve of the August elections, is planning a national canvass.

Wild Life "Bunk"
Will Hays Finds No Evidence of Riotous Living in Hollywood
He Tells Commerce Chamber
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Los Angeles—Will H. Hays, after a week's stay in Hollywood, has come to the conclusion that the talk about the wild life in Hollywood is "bunk." He so told the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce at a dinner and get-together arranged by the New York Chamber.
"The one bad influence in Hollywood is talk," said Hays. "For the love of me, I cannot see the horrors of Hollywood. We must remove the reason for lies about the industry. Ours is a duty to youth. We are not so much interested in millions of dollars invested in the industry as we are in the millions of children whose morals and education are endangered in it."—Albert E. Smith Back

In Gay Paree
If you can work here you're good. This is the place. Where they take the hands off the clock. And the only ones who work. Are slaves to the wheel of labor. Such as Adolphe Osso. Who is so busy with Paramount. That he doesn't know anything else exists. His office looks like an art gallery. And all of his force talk English. That is essential. Because all the American film folk. Insist on visiting his office. To kill time. And get posted. As to how Paris plays.
Osso's office isn't at all. Like the office he had in Broadway. You'd never think he was the same boy. And he isn't. He's married 'n everything. With a baby boy. Who is the pride of La Belle France.

Then another hard worker is Harry Reichenbach. Who is preparing to sail for home. Soon. Has a lot of stuff to develop. In America. And you never can tell what his future plans will be.
Paul Brunet is occasionally in his office. But spends most of his time in the country. In his chateau. Some reports circulating here. That Papa Paul may remain here for some time.

QUIMBY'S PLAN
Fred Quimby is busy perfecting plans. Which may result. In his remaining abroad a year or so. He has an idea of making productions abroad. With American stars and directors. Has his first material as well. Now in Berlin. Talking things over with Dick Stanton. Who has a like idea. And they may work out a joint plan of action. Quimby has also heard of some other ideas. Inventions. And may work with them as well.

WATCH THIS ONE
There is a lot of talk here. Of a German invention. Which. If it does what is claimed for it. May turn things upside down. And. If it gets in the hands of the wrong people. Cause all sorts of trouble. The invention is said to be a new process. Of printing. By which dupe prints can be made. From prints. Without the negative being used at all. And in addition. More prints can be made. From the first. Without any difficulty. So perfect is the process said to be. That no one can tell the original. From the duped.
This process, of course, would bring about a great saving. In making prints. But the danger of such a process. Is surely obvious. And in the hands of unprincipled owners. Might play havoc. There is a tremendous amount of duping. Now going on. Especially in foreign countries—the Far East particularly. Imagine what this machine could do. If someone wanted to play crooked with it. And there are some bad boys in this business. Why should he hesitate. To do anything. Short of murder. If they thought it could be put over.

This is one of the things the Hays organization. Might well keep a weather eye on. At this time it is exceedingly difficult to obtain a view of the machine. But I understand the rights for England and France have been disposed of.

ANOTHER PROCESS

For printing. And developing. Has been perfected. In Germany. The American rights to it have been obtained. So the story goes. By a syndicate of Americans headed by a big department store man of Pittsburgh. Named Kaufman. Who claims it will revolutionize printing. In the States. Kaufman knows little of the technical side of pictures. But the story goes that the former chief technicians. Of the old UFA concern. Of Germany. Are interested in the invention. And claim that it is perfect. In operation. Among the interesting and time and money saving features. Of the process. Is said to be the ability. To perfectly print and tone. Each successive shot. To have it perfect. According to what the director desired. Incidentally the entire negative can be printed. So the story goes. Without the reel ever being opened. In other words. The negative is placed in the projector.

The plan is to license the machines. Which can be erected for very little. They will not be sold outright. Kaufman is enthusiastic. Over the possibilities of the invention. And claims. That several important American producers. Who have seen it. Are anxious to obtain it.

ON THE BOULEVARDS

They are showing interesting pictures. Many old. Among the newer ones. Is "Les Trois Illuminaries"—The Three Candles—which is the German made picture. Controlled in America. By Weiss Brothers. Who call it "Destiny." It is doing well.

THE LIFE IN STUDIOS

Over on this side. Would tempt anyone. To work here. In France. In between the shots. They talk things over. With a glass of wine handy. In Berlin they have their beer. Always near the piano. And the entire technical and directorial force. Stand around. Enjoying their beer. While discussing what next to do.

In America they have ice water. Sometimes. And like it.

LITTLE COMPO BOARD USED

In German studios. They have perfected an arrangement. By which that construction. Is covered with plaster. Said to be made of the "Than conno." And particularly good. For exteriors. But just how that would work out. For interiors. And walls of dining rooms. Or other rooms. Sounds difficult. To American directors. Who have been told about it.

Appealed to Hays
British Authorities Asked that Kitchener Film Be Kept Out of This Country
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Washington—The British Embassy, it is learned, has made an official request to Will H. Hays to use his influence in keeping out of this country “How Kitchener Was Betrayed,” a picture made in Germany, and the subject of a stormy controversy there for some time.
From New York, word comes that J. Parker Read, Jr., has been named American agent for the picture, with the right to arrange its sale here.
The story maintains that Kitchener was betrayed through the machinations of a German female spy, who used her wiles on a young British officer, who led her what boat Kitchener was to sail on.
In the interim, United States Treasury officials have under advisement the question of whether or not the film should be allowed into the country. It is held in customs in New York at the moment.

World Describes Illinois Process
The Sunday World in some details carried an article describing the new synchronizing process for motion pictures and the voice developed at the University of Illinois. A second article written by the inventor explains in \npart the technical angles.

Mary Alden will appear in “Notoriety,” William Nigh’s first picture for Weber and North.

Famous Players Temporarily Enjoined in Detroit—Row Over Service to John Kunsky

(Daily Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Detroit—After one postponement on Wednesday, a hearing on the injunction matter (which the Broadway Strand and Phil Gleichman against Famous Players-Lasky, the Madison Theatre Co., the Capitol Theatre Co., the Adams Theatre Co., and John H. Kunsky will come up today before Judge Ira W. Jayne in the Federal Court.

The defendants have been temporarily enjoined from exhibiting any more Paramount pictures in either the Capitol, Madison or Adams theaters. Gleichman alleges that the recent exhibition in the Kunsky house of Paramount pictures, featuring Wallace Reid, Thomas Meighan and My McAvoy, is a breach of a contract entered into between him and Famous Players, whereby the Broadway Strand, in return for agreeing to show Paramount pictures exclusively, was to have first pick. Gleichman sets forth that this contract was executed Sept. 29, 1919.

"Zenda" Opens at Astor

"The Prisoner of Zenda" opened at the Astor last night. The engagement is indefinite.

Hays in San Francisco

San Francisco—Will H. Hays was here yesterday, coming up from Los Angeles.

The Hays office expressed the belief yesterday that Mr. Hays was further north than San Francisco by this time. He will probably make a stop en route, reaching New York in about 10 days.

Polia Negri Going West

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—If Jesse L. Lasky has been correctly quoted in the Times, Polia Negri’s visit to America will be for more than one picture. The Times attributes the following letter to Lasky:

"My arrangements for her arrival in this country contemplate her reaching New York Sept. 1. After one picture there she will come West."
In the Courts

The fact that Leopold Singer has filed suit in the Supreme Court against Pathe Exchange, Inc., and George A. Ferguson is revealed in an appearance made by Goedert Bros. for Pathe. The details are not given.

In the suit of Adam and Charles Kessel against Triangle to recover $89,255 on a judgment obtained in Virginia, the plaintiffs have applied to dismiss the counterclaim for $90,000 and strike out the answer on the ground that the case has been decided by a court of competent jurisdiction. The judgment is based on the purchase of the Kessels’ stock in Triangle by the corporation.

An attachment for $2,360 has been granted in the Supreme Court against the property of Leonce Perret, who has been in France for nearly two years, in a suit of Georgette Duchesse, who was his secretary and interpreter. She claims $10,888 as a sixth interest in the profits of the Emerald Film Co. $1,160 is said to be due and $100 on a loan in September, 1920, which was to be repaid in a week.

Supreme Court Justice Finch has decided to appoint a referee to examine Ivan Abramson as to the proceeds of the film, “The Eternal Mother,” for which Eugene Spling has sued for an accounting, and in the meantime Abramson is restrained from disposing of the film permanently or making any contracts for it which are not approved by Spitz.

The defendant is also directed to give Spitz access to all the books and records concerning the picture, and to deposit the funds of the venture in a depository to be designated by the court.

New Brunswick House Opens Soon

St. Stephen, N. B.—The Bijou, on the Maine border, will be completed in time for opening Sept. 1. This house will play a straight picture policy, and replaces the old Bijou, destroyed by fire in the spring.

Minto, N. B.—The Opera House has been opened. There is a lower floor and balcony seating 600. Policy is straight pictures.

Hearing Today

with the stipulation that it was to be renewed each year for a period of five years. The plaintiff avers that the three pictures referred to were given to Kunisky houses without first being offered to the Broadway Strand, and that the defendants “have sought by sordid flagrant methods of fraud and double dealing” to annul the contract between Gleichman and the producers. Last Wednesday announcement was made in the newspapers that arrangements had been completed to give Kunisky the pick of the productions.

Gleichman charges that Kunisky has offered Famous Players larger exhibition prices than they were receiving under his own contract. It was stated that the producers have received as high as $8,500 in a single week from the Broadway Strand, getting half the receipts after certain running expenses were deducted.

The Kunisky houses have taken a neutral attitude in the matter.

George Wees, of Famous Players, returned from Detroit on Saturday, where he had gone in connection with the above litigation.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor but his show over. Can you along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you clean up.

Grand Island, Neb.—On the basis that the success of exploitation depends upon attracting attention and that it is the unusual that catches the public's eye, the manager of the Lyda, worked a new one for his showing of "Hail the Woman."

Remembering that it was the man bringing the dog who won the headlines in the paper, he used a Sauta Claus for his street ballyhoo in the middle of summer. When winter comes around, if this manager's convictions persevere, he'll probably have some poor son of toll walking the sidewalks in a palm beach suit.

Lafayette, Ind.—By a systematic mailing campaign that covered seven days, Manager Herbert Johnson of the Luna brought his patrons to his National's "The Seventh Day." Taking advantage of the theme of the story, which revolves around a country boy's idealization of a sophisticated city girl, the manager sent one letter a day to his patrons along the following order: "Our hero is made captain of a sailing schooner. "Our hero gets his first glimpse of the Dream Woman." "Our heroine tries a dangerous flirtation." "Our hero falls desperately in love." "The discilful heroine brings the hero back to earth." "Our hero in the depths of despair." "How does it end? Our hero, Richard Barthelmess will act his story at the Luna next week."

This teaser system aroused interest without telling too much about the story and they flocked to see the picture in consequence.

Milwaukee—Contests having been badly overworked, Manager Wettstein, of the Merrill, evolved a new plan when he booked "Greater Than Love." He secured ten students from Marquette Academy to act as juvenile reporters for the Wisconsin News of Milwaukee in sleuthing out the answer to the query. "Is there anything Greater Than Love?"

By a straight news story—for the paper played up this novel experiment on its front pages, Manager Wettstein got more publicity for his picture than he could have obtained with a dozen essay contests. Prominent interviews were arranged for these "subs" and motion pictures were made of them receiving their instructions from City Editor Ewald in the act of interviewing prominent citizens.

The stunt had the whole town agog and sufficient in itself to give the picture all the exploitation it needed. The total cost was $600 which included the usual newspaper advertising and the sum, in a city the size of Milwaukee with corresponding newspaper advertising rates, was small.

Coast Brevities
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Hollywood—Buster Keaton's next comedy is to be "The Love Nest." There will be no women in the cast.

Anna Q. Nilsson will play the feminine lead in "Timber."

Eugene Besserer will appear with Vida Dassin in "June Madness."

Norman Taurog is directing Joe Rock in a series of comedies for Federated.

A Guy Frumm is now treasurer for the Pacific Film Co. He was formerly with Universal.

William Fairbanks is to play the leading role in "Peaceful Peters," which Ben Wilson will produce.

M. W. Howard, star and author of "The Bishop of the Ozarks," will in the near future start work on "Peggy Ware."

John Finn is acting as assistant to Mason N. Lifson in producing two new comedies with Johnny Jones, Gertrude Messinger and other kiddies.

Bruce Mitchell has been signed by Ben Wilson to direct Monte Bankes. Mitchell directed Jack Richards in a series of comedies for the T. R. Coffin Co.

Keneth Harlan has the male lead in "The World's a Stage," in which Mary Phillips is starring for Principal Pictures. It is the first production of that organization.

41 Great Paramount Pictures
A William deMille Production with Bebe Daniels

By Clara Beranger

Released January 29, 1923

This yet untitled production has a combination of producer, star and author that means sure-fire success. Bebe Daniels in the leading role wears some daring and striking costumes, and appears in the most varied characterization of her entire career.

Clara Beranger wrote the story especially for Mr. deMille and Miss Daniels, under the producer's personal supervision. The author will be remembered as having written Mae Murray's greatest success, "The Gilded Lily," and Gloria Swanson's "Her Husband's Trademark." A great cast will appear in support.

OUT AUGUST 6th
One With "Griff" and Then Mae Marsh Returns to England for Two More Pictures—Now Over There

Before Mae Marsh sailed for England to appear in a picture for the Graham-Wilcox Prodl, an English producing company, it was arranged for her to appear in a film directed by David W. Griffith. Miss Marsh will probably be back in New York about Sept. 1, and shortly after that will return with Griffith. It has been variously reported that the picture would be "A Decie," which Griffith made a year ago for Biograph. Another report has it that the Marsh production will be "The White Ape," a Joseph L. Morgenstern story which he has held for a number of years.

Upon completion of this picture, Miss Marsh will return to New York and make two more pictures for Graham-Wilcox Prod.

Albert L. Grey, of the Griffith office, stated yesterday that the picture would be neither of those two mentioned. He said that "Sands Decie" had been talked of but had been abandoned. He added the story will be an original, in which both Miss Marsh and Carol Dempster will star.

Cincinnati Film Club Backs Hoy (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Cincinnati, O.—That there is no aspect for any change just at present in local conditions of the Film Board of Trade, and that Hoy system will operate here for some time as it has hitherto operated, is the manner in which W. A. Fisher, president of the Board, sums up the situation. A resolution was passed at a meeting of the body urging the Hoy plan as the best way to adjust the situation and provide for the exhibition of films in the city.

Rules on Imports

Described by Local Anzeiger of Berlin—Important Film Men Discuss Matter

(By Cable to THE FILM DAILY)

Berlin—The Local Anzeiger, on Monday published a special section devoted to the new regulations governing the importation of American pictures into Germany.

The fact that the Anzeiger devotes a whole section to the matter is considered significant here. The Anzeiger is an important daily in Berlin and in Germany, and the comment that will arise when its Monday issue goes into circulation is bound to be marked.

The issue contains special articles by Will H. Hays, Adolph Zukor, William Fox, and others representing the American Film industry, as well as from prominent directors and statesmen of Germany.

Object of First Picture to Be Made by John Brunton—Later Plans More Work

John Brunton is returned to Miami, Fla., C. J. Klein, first picture at the Miami Studios, Inc. The picture will be in the nature of a boost for the brand and North Exchange interesting points and landmarks of the Southern city will be shown.

The idea is to arouse interest in Miami as a production center, as the first shot in a campaign to persuade producers to work there. The studio, which is understood to be a large one, was erected by the Curiss aero-plane interests. When Brunton first announced its connection with the organization, it was said that the film on the life of Thomas A. Edison was planned for a future date. M. P. Commission Has Collected $229,459.07 in First 10 Months—18 Rejections

The Motion Picture Commission, of the State of New York, created under the Lusk-Clayton law in 1921, yesterday entered the second year of its activities.

The commission has collected in the 10 months ending July 1, $229,459.07 from permits and license fees. Of that amount, the funds accruing from the issuance of permits were considerable. That source of revenue has been practically exhausted, since pictures made before August 1, 1921, have by this time been exhibited.

Joseph Levenson, secretary of the commission, said yesterday he had no other figures available but those given above. At a recent meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, however, he said that there have been 18 rejections out of a possible total of 5,300 pictures submitted since the commission has been operative. Levenson's speech was made on July 6.

Under the provisions of the statute that brought the commission into being, George H. Cobb, the chairman, will be in office until Dec. 31, 1923; Mrs. Eli T. Hosmer, until Dec. 31, 1924; and Joseph Levenson, until Dec. 31, 1922.

C. official stated that it was decided to remove the pledge from the operators because he said the operators had taken an uncompromising stand.

Object to Tim's Article

William H. Hays and Sydney S. Cohen have interchanged telegrams, in which a New York Times interview with Hays was discussed. Hays urged that the public stay away from theaters showing objectionable pictures. Cohen wired Hays that exhibitors had complained that the article placed them in a false light. In reply, Hays answered Cohen by saying that the Times had gotten the wrong slant on the matter.
Wednesday, August 2, 1922

American—* * * The kind of picture to which one can— and is urged to— turn the way America is conducting her summer entertainment.

Morning Telegraph— * * * Do not despair. There are still surprisingly delightful personalities that any picture in which she appears manages to make in some words. "The Country Flapper" is just two as long as John Bowers and Miss Misch can keep up their usual sort of flourishes and the street people, and want to keep the needed of a fan and a willingness to trade plumbeauty for a good laugh.

Eve. Telegraph— * * * That the cut flapper is to be found in all of her glory almost any small town is the contention of the producer of this picture, and they have given the world as the best proving the point is rather interesting.

Mail— * * * Dorothy is a clever girl in her own type of roles, and those who are familiar with the cut flapper.

Post— * * * There isn’t any hard work involved in watching this film, it is rather for the boy who likes to hold any much with any plot to speak of and an amusing sort of flapper.

Newspaper Opinions

"The Prisoner of Zenda"—Metro Astor

Times— * * * Intriguing reputation as a producer ranks with the other photo play well worth seeing.

Herald— * * * The production of Mr. Ingram’s scenario with a few exceptions are the settings that have been made. They have soturrets, yet they are clear. They have depths, and they are not hurtful. They have symmetry and harmony. They are also animated. Mr. Ingram is correct.

Suns— * * * It is an interesting story of the wise and foolish.

Eve. Telegraph— * * * Has some good sex scenes. * * * Miss Compton plays the role of a charming captain’s daughter.

Globe— * * * One often hears of the pictures which take the tired business man, his wife and children away from the so-called dull, dreary, weary world, but it is all too seldom they are actually seen. "The Bonded Woman" is a poor substitute of the picture. The story has been sufficiently transferred to the screen and in this form is by the very nature of the play, extremely which is a great deal. Bury is perhaps the main star, but John Bowers dominates the picture.

Eve. Journal— * * * John Bowers is a most extraordinary advertising tool. Betty Compton is as amusing as ever. But half of all that is said about her in the other screen papers is mere advertising.

Mail— * * * A theme which has been used many times in the motion picture world, but this is given a rather unusual treatment.

Post— * * * Have you ever attended a "movie" and been so interested that you would love to have caught a good one well acted, staged, and directed by any one as interesting as this? Then suddenly the plot of the story snapped; really because it was not the least bit funny but the property man decided to make it so many reels long, and it still had to be. Well, that is just what happens in "The Bonded Woman."

"The Country Flapper"—Producers’ Security—State Rights

Times— * * * Includes in its cast two of the best comedy pantomimists of the screen, Dorothy Gish and Glenn Misch. It would be safe to say that anyone who like them is going to see the picture which they do brightly, they are unusually ineffectual. Because, apparently instead of the act themselves they like to give that impression of themselves, or directing them to act as if they never did it. But even so, it is bad. They can act on occasion but it is not not often to begin with, but merely an assortment of stock characters and slap-stick small town situations with the wit all worn off them.

Herald— * * * Much of the humor of the Mack Sennett style is in the pictures. Dorothy Gish has made one of the funniest performances of her career and Miss Misch, having been so often of her favorites in the Sennett series, the picture doesn’t follow any straight line of development and keeps the audience from getting the picture about as it please. * * * Miss Gish is as full of life and spirits as a cunary.

The Winnipeg Free Press, August 2, 1922

The Bonded Woman—F. P. L. Riato

Herald— * * * For about half of its length a repetition of "The Salving of John Sover." The picture is not a trip—after that it gets shyly. It opens well, makes a promise, and then never fulfills it. There is nothing to it. Ever so lively a crew before the cameras.

Trinity—We did not find the picture as interesting as it should have been in view of the material. It is a story of a man and a woman that led one in it.

Mail— * * * Miss Compton plays a most charming captain’s daughter. Thus does the Riato’s press department sum up this spicy picture. Mr. Ingram has given us an extremely fine action picture on board ship.

American—* * * The kind of picture which one can—and is urged to—turn the way America is conducting her summer entertainment.

Morning Telegraph— * * * Do not despair. There are still surprisingly delightful personalities that any picture in which she appears manages to make in some words. "The Country Flapper" is just two as long as John Bowers and Miss Misch can keep up their usual sort of flourishes and the street people, and want to keep the needed of a fan and a willingness to trade plumbeauty for a good laugh.

Eve. Telegraph— * * * That the cut flapper is to be found in all of her glory almost any small town is the contention of the producer of this picture, and they have given the world as the best proving the point is rather interesting.

Mail— * * * Dorothy is a clever girl in her own type of roles, and those who are familiar with the cut flapper.

Post— * * * There isn’t any hard work involved in watching this film, it is rather for the boy who likes to hold any much with any plot to speak of and an amusing sort of flapper.

Poster Survey

Exhibitors, Queried by First National Give Preferences as to Styles of Posters and Lobby Cards

Associated First National has been in touch for several weeks with exhibitors and has obtained from them data on which it is basing its new output of accessories. Having made a nation-wide survey of the accessory problem, First National immediately proceeded to improve its methods of buying and handling accessories so as to minimize the element of chance in the handing of them.

In its survey, questionnaires were sent to hundreds of exhibitors asking them to give their ideas as to the number of designs for one and three sheet posters, the styles of lobby displays they favored, and their views on accessories in general. The survey brought out the following facts:

Number of exhibitors favoring one design and three sheet 640.

Number favoring two styles of one sheet 312.

Number favoring less expensive, uncolored 11x14 lobby display 424.

Number favoring more expensive, lobby display cards 84.

Number favoring 2x28 colored lobby display 600.

Number favoring uncolored lobby display 84.

Number favoring 24 sheets on all subjects 168.

In accordance with the verdict of exhibitors, First National will hereafter supply accessories as follows.

One design one and three-sheet posters on average releases, 6 sheets on all releases. Two design one and three sheet posters on special releases. Uncolored 11x14 lobby displays on average releases. Colored 2x28 lobby displays of the highest artistic merit on exceptional releases. Colored 2x28 lobby cards on all releases. Twenty-four sheets on exceptional releases. Special novelty accessories on exceptional releases.

Astor
"The Prisoner of Zenda" has started an indefinite run here. In addition, the program includes an orchestral number consisting of music from S. Mokrako's "Haika," and a prologue. In the latter,包括了由Moka的"Haika"以及一个前导。在后者中，

Cameo
"Sherlock Holmes," starring John Barrymore, will run for another week.

Capitol
The orchestra starts by playing "Southern Rhapsody," after which Matilda Loras renders Mendelssohn's "Capriccio Brillante" on the piano. "The Unbeliever," which comes next, is a Prima Dona and then there is a ballet number from "The Masked Ball," by Mlle. Gambaroli and Alexander Gaman- sky. After that is the news reel, followed by the prologue to the feature. In this, Thalia Zavala does the pantomime, while Caroline Andrews sings "The Country Plundering Invitations" written by E. O. Van Peit and Jesse Winn. The feature is Dorothy Gish in "Money Flapper," and there is another musical number, "The Blue Danube," by Frederick Fruehling, featuring the solo and orchestral accompaniment. A Hy Mayer Travelogue, "Such Is Life on the Riviera" concludes.

Central
"Human Heart," a new feature with a Century Comedy, "Hicksville Romeo," with Leo Manow, furnishing the comedy. "In a Blacksmith Shop," is the prologue to the principal offering, and there are two other numbers by the orchestra, with John George Lange conducting and a news reel.

Cohan
The police officer in "In the Name of the Law," continues its run here.

Criterion
"Forget Me Not" remains the chief attraction at this house.

Rialto
Opening with music from Offenbach's "The Grand-Guignol," the program includes another musical number shortly after. The Chemical Mystery number is a "Moorish Dance," a scenic music, with Martha Grayson, Adrian Silver, tenor, singing "Within the Garden of My Heart," by Alice Scott, and the orchestra is furnished with the screen as usual. Emma Nee, soprano, renders the "Bird Song," from Leonard's "I Pazziancini," after which the feature, Betty Compson in "The Bonded Woman," goes on. W. Remington Welch follows by playing on the new "Waltz organ," and Dan Mason in "Top Turtles' Clever Catcher" closes.

Rivoli
Selections from the Bar, with Johann Strauss' operas, are played by the orchestra at the start, after which comes the Rivoli pictorial, "The Way of a Teacher," a post picture, and is followed by "The Jargon of Julius," a daisy number by Paul Osard and Martha Mason. "Crimson Salute," a daisy number, is followed by "The Frozen Cage," and George Richardson sings "Because of You," followed by a box in the "B P." box. Then comes the "Lovey Face Comedy, "All Balled Up," closes.

Strand
"Fools First," is the feature, while five other numbers are "All Wet," an Al St. John number, "The National Review," and "Odd's Ends," consisting of "The Trap-"

"The Young Diana" Paramount—6590 Feet

Reviewed by Charles Larkin

If this is a sample of what Paramount is going to offer film fans this coming season, one will be glad to see a jaded old world in for a surprise, at least as far as motion picture entertainment goes. If there ever was a picture that has everything, this one is it. To begin with, there's one of the finest casts ever assembled. It includes besides the star, such well known artists as Maclain Arbuckle, Forrest Stanley, Gypsy O'Brien and Pedro de Cordoba. Second, it is produced with absolute disregard for expense. It is the most lavishly mounted picture Cosmopolitan has ever offered the Paramount program. Third, the gowns worn by Miss Davies constitute a style show which will be a valuable asset for you in exploiting the picture to your fair sex patrons. Fourth, the story has a "different" angle and it holds the interest every moment. Fifth, Miss Davies appears in two extremes of characterization, first as a young girl, then as a woman 20 years older, grey haired and approaching spinsterhood. Sixth, the Ice Carnival scenes will set a new standard for lavishness. Here is pantomime and tableau, color, novelty, beauty—all mixed into a series of scenes unsurpassed in gorgeousness.

One could go on indefinitely enumerating the assets of this production. Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola have directed the picture in a praiseworthy manner and Mrs. John Reed has admirably adapted Marie Corelli's colorful tale to the screen. Miss Davies in this picture has been given her opportunity. Her work as the young girl, then as the aged spinster, later as Mademoiselle Galatea, brings out histrionic ability heretofore not believed to be in her possession. Joseph Urban's settings are quite the scene of perfection and he has outdone both "Enchantment," and "Beauty's Worth," in elaborate screen mounting. The ice carnival scenes will set a high mark for others to shoot at.

The story is one possessing novel twists. It deals with the hunt for eternal youth which carries the audience through a series of weird and thoroughly enjoyable adventures. Just as one starts to think how unreal it all is, we find it nothing but a dream and we find ourselves immensely pleased with it all and the observer will be puzzled right up to the close, as the outcome of the story. "The Young Diana" is an attraction that should help to usher in the most successful season in the history of the industry.

The Cast

Diana May...........................................Marion Davies
Mr. May.............................................Maclain Arbuckle Commander Crosser.............................................Forrest Stanley Lady Anne...............................................Gypsy O'Brien
Dr. Dimitrius...........................................Robert G. Vignola
By Marie Corelli. Directed by Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola. Scenario by Luther Reed. Photographed by Harold Wenstrom.

The Stars—The plot has an English locale and its complications are due to the desire of a parvenu father that his daughter, Diana, shall marry into society. The father has an affection for Diana, but wants her to marry Dr. Dimitrius as her husband. Diana, however, is in love with a British naval officer. In a dream that carries her through some of the most weird adventures ever pictured on the screen, she sees the commander eloping with another woman and twenty years pass. Dr. Dimitrius restores her to youth, which does not, however, bring her happiness because love has departed.

Classification—A superb picturization of the dramatic story which ran serially in Hearst's Magazine and was later published in book form. Transferred to the screen in lavish and intensely interesting manner.

Production Highlights—The gorgeous gowns worn by Miss Davies. The lavish and beautiful settings by Joseph Urban, especially those showing the Ice Carnival at Montreux. The very excellent cast. The apparent disregard for expense as far as mounting is concerned. The weird home and office of Dr. Dimitrius in Switzerland. The restorning of Diana May to youth. The meeting, 20 years later, of her old sweetheart and the stormy scenes that follow. The deep, luxurious interiors. The fine interpretation given a difficult dual role by Miss Davies, who here contributes her best work to screen literature. The scenes at the Paris opera, where the star as Mademoiselle Galatea starts the French capital with her beauty.

Exploitation Angle—There is no limit to them in this one. The star's popularity. The gorgeous gowns. The Ice Carnival. Drug store tie-ups on the elixir of life theme. Put on a Beauty Show. You can get some great prologue ideas from the Ice Carnival scenes which will also give you suggestions for lobby dress. Play up the name of the author and arrange for book store displays of her works, including this story. This is a picture where the more you spend in boosting it the more you'll get out of it at the box office.

Drawing Power—The finest theatres in the world can put this one on and reap a golden harvest. It should go anywhere, anytime. Exhibitors who can't make money with an attraction of this calibre should open butcher shops—they'll find the bacon there.

Rev. Ingram and a party of film folk, including Alice Terry, his wife and Col. Ford, his business manager, arrived in New York from the coast yesterday. One of the first things Ingram did was to visit the Astor theater to see "The Prisoner of Zenda."

The director will remain in the East for some time. He will meet John Russell, the author, in about two weeks to collaborate on a film version of "The Passion Vine." This will Ingram's next production and will be made in the West Indies. Following that, he will do "Tolled of the Sea." He may then go abroad to make a third picture.

"Trilling Women," the latest Ingram production, is in New York. A print was brought East with the Ingram party.

Combined Operation

New Invention Photographs Sound and Pictures Simultaneously—

Both on One Film

Early in July, announcement was made in Chicago from the laboratories of the University of Illinois that a process of synchronizing motion pictures and sound and pictures had been perfected. An official announcement from the University at Urbana describes the process as follows:

"Professor Joseph T. Tyko, Mr. has, after 20 years' work, perfected a machine which not only photographs the usual moving picture as we are used to seeing it on the screen, but at the same time and on the same film photographs sound. So far have the experiments gone that the ring of a bell, the sound of a door and the human voice are reproduced with an accuracy that is uncanny.

"With the patenting of this machine, the University of Illinois has secured the second of its patents on the fundamental in the art of talking motion pictures. Six months ago that institution announced that another one of its staff, Professor Jacob Kunz, had perfected a sound cell which, unlike its predecessors, did not show any fatigue through use.

"The apparatus which is working daily at the university takes moving pictures simultaneously with the photographing of the speech of the acting persons. The machine is equipped with a mercury arc of special con-

Minneapolis Exchange Dickerin for

Warner Output—Buys Licht- man Franchise

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Minneapolis—The F. and R. Film Company, which is operated by Finkelstein and Ruben, has purchased a number of productions for distribution here. The exchange although controlled by F. and R., is conducted as a separate organization without any affiliation with Associated First National Pictures of Minnesota, Inc.

A deal is under way with Warner Bros. for the seven pictures that company will produce next season. The territory involved is Minnesota, North and South Dakota and the upper peninsula of Michigan. Both parties have not as yet been signed.

F. and R. will distribute all of the Al Lichtman product in Minnesota, Wisconsin, the Dakotas and Upper Michigan as well as the Franklyn Farnum series of westerns made by W. M. Smith Prod., Inc., of Tulsa.

The company at present controls "Burn Em Up Barnes," "I Am the Law," "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" and the Prizma output.

"Nero" Closes Aug. 31

"Nero" will close its run at the Lyric Aug. 31. It will have had 225 engagements since May, when it opened. On Sept. 1st "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," will follow it into that house.

Will Change Revenue Methods

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Dallas—According to George Hopkins, internal revenue collector of this city, a radical change will be effected in the methods of tax collection. It is charged that flagrant violations of the internal revenue tax laws are being sold off at a loss, and Hopkins says violators of the miscellaneous tax act in which the biggest item is the admissions levy will be prosecuted.

RICHARD WALTON TULLY

the famous producer, presents this film version of John Hunter Booth’s dramatization of Katherine Cecil Thurston’s famous novel, which has been read by 12,000,000 persons. Directed by James Young.

A FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTION
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Terry Turner, of the Loew office, arranged for the New York company of the "Forget-Me-Not," at the Criterion, several days before the picture opened, to which directors and managers in Brooklyn and throughout New York were invited as well as newspapermen, special writers and the trade. Before the picture opened, and obtained the cooperation of the orphanage executives.

The Fifth Avenue bus house, next approached and donated 60 busses to carry orphans, foundlings and dependent children to see the picture and in a few days it was discovered that the buses had been followed in by kiddy fans and bearing 12-foot banners of the picture. Fifty per cent of the net profits were donated to the institution.

The managers of many popular New York theaters took advantage of the "swamp baby" stories played up heavily in the papers, and had scenes of a baby in a swamp with the caption following "Forget Me Not!" Considerable publicity was gleaned through a contest sponsored by Commissioner of Welfare S. Coler and the directors of one of the orphanages. Coler, though he had not seen the picture requested institutions not to allow their children to see it because "he had heard" it did not represent true conditions existing in modern orphanages. His letter and ation was sent by the various directors who saw it and Coler was defied. During the week 3,400 busses were filled by kiddy fans were the guests of Marcus Loew.

Instead of sitting back and believing the existence of radio as a business killer, Edward L. Hyman, of the Broadway Strand amassed his idea resources and plucked a good one. He used radio in such a way that it built business, for his house. Hyman approached the managers of two broadcasting stations, one of which was Wanaamaker's in New York and the other an independent. Coler, through Brooklyn, with a proposition that looked purely social. He offered the services of one of the theater's admen to participate in one of the radio concerts. In return he obtained the following:

"So far as the theater was concerned the whole idea was to use the radio stations during its run in Brooklyn, with a proposition that looked purely social. He offered the services of one of the theater's admen to participate in one of the radio concerts. In return he obtained the following:

"The announcement made two months prior to the opening of "Journey to the Pastime through the efforts of H. P. Gilmore and Paul Fireman, Kansas City. Every day for a week in advance of the run, small scatter-ads appeared in the "Pastime" herald calling attention to the "Journey to Pastime." On the day before the opening the Pastime crashed its message with a double-truck of nine co-operating radio stations. The campaign was the theater's own display, explaining the mystery. "Journey to Pastime" was: 1—Glenn Swanson, and 2—Edward Valentino, in R—Elinor Glyn's 4—"Beyond the Rocks." The campaign was also helped along by use of hidden names in the text of the ad. A beauty contest conducted by the newspaper, local merchants offering prizes of wearing apparel to the most beautiful girls in the town.

"Journey to Pastime," the town was astounded one morning to find a full-size grave stone erected on the principal corner of the street with this inscription in verse on it: "Beneath this hunk of stone so cold Lies a guy who's gone already, Who laid down and died when he was told.

"Muran of the Lady Letty." It was made of wood by Manager J. L. Hyman, Jr., of Strand Opera House, and was painted white to look like stone, being inscribed in black. Paramount Exploder Banker, of the Toronto exchange, tied up with the Royal Canadian Bank to allow the tombstone on its property, in the center of the town.

Davenport, IA.——The "Crossroads of New York" sported a new line of copyrighted material during its run at the Capitol. The crossroads sign plunked was consummated to its logical conclusion because the manager had complete control over the police department by which he was permitted to place a certain number of men on it, and had them work as traffic enforcers by real policemen.

of facts, however, are not worse than they have been. Let us get the idea about poor pictures out of the minds of the public.

Not Rothstein followed this up with some remarks about sportsmanship. He pointed out that there is so much jealousy being displayed in the industry.

"Let us try to start a real spirit of sportsmanship," he remarked, and if the other fellow really had a good picture, give him credit. Recently, he was approached by someone affiliated with a rival organization and asked to run a cooperative advertisement concealing that his film was a good one and recommending it to the exhibitors under his signature. He added that he was "considering it." That the public must be reached was Rothstein's contention, and he was especially emphatic about the Metro production now at the Astor, stating that civic officials be invited to attend such ceremonies. The matter of abuse of the idea was taken up, and it was pointed out that this might become a pernicious influence if poor pictures were honored and the public duped with a resultant loss of confidence.

"For an example," Rothstein mentioned, "The Prisoner of Zenda," the motion picture of the committee in the Metro exchange, "Down on the Beach." Rothstein's experiences, Reichenbach had some interesting data. The Germans are the first ones to look into American Pictures, and the picture of it was shown in England and France, they fairly shun the twinkle lights that lure the populace, he explained.

"Now, that's" Rothstein's much joy, observed, that in Scotland, the sea-gulls are staring, following the Scotch ships. In London, he declared, the purchaser of a ticket must hire Honda to find it. Why? Because there are no lights.

Plan of Local Exchanges—Would Pool Resources and Operate Nationally

The conferences of independent exchanges, which have been held in New York this week, have been concerned with the formation of an organization tentatively known as the Amalgamated Independent Film Distributors.

Julius Singer, local representative of the Criterion Film Co., and Pat Beck was instrumental in getting the independents together for the purpose of ascertaining what process might be made in the way of reduced overhead. Present at one of the meetings were representatives of Second National, New York Producers, National Exchange, Myriad, Climax, Avyon, and MacFadden, Inc., Model, censor and Champion. A committee is now at work on the plan which would provide for operation of all independents in every exchange center out of one central point. One force would be sold for the sale of the combined product and the money accruing from an economy would be used to secure new productions.

Singer estimated yesterday that if independent exchanges in New York should agree to work on a cooperative basis, $100,000 per week would be ptuced each day. In speaking of the plan yesterday, he said:

"The Amalgamated Independent Distributors is a group of film exchanges desiring to eliminate such waste and duplication of effort possible in combining their resources under one distributing head. In the instance there are some 25 independent exchanges in the city of New York, each exchange pays tremendous rent due to the scarcity and restrictions on film space. The result of these small independent exchanges alone amounts to over $100,000 per week. There are some (Continued on Page 2)

Plans a “Come Back”
Mrs. Evelyn Snow Enters Ohio Politics—Gubernatorial Candidates Against Censorship
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Columbus, O.—The censorship question in Ohio is being a political football, thrown around for campaign purposes by various candidates for office.

Mrs. Evelyn Snow, despoiled head of the censor board in this state, has entered politics as a “stump” speaker for Carl Thompson, candidate for governor. Mrs. Snow is endeavoring to stage a “come-back.”

Other gubernatorial candidates are using the censorship problem for political purposes. Efforts to capture the votes of the liberals in the state are being made by Congressman Charles Knight, the publisher of the Akron Beacon-Journal, publisher, who is a candidate for the governorship. At a meeting on Wednesday evening, he denounced censorship as “unnecessary.” Homer G. Dunard, a third candidate from a third party, has announced a platform of Sunday pictures and death to “unfair censorship.”

Demas B. Ulrey, owner of two picture theaters here and a candidate for the legislature in a district which, in part, is votes on censorship, a Selznick News reel showing Will H. Hays making the statement that censorship is impossible and not in keeping with the principles of freedom was passed by the Ohio board and allowed to be shown throughout the state.

No News Reel Censorship
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Richmond, Va.—A decision to omit news reels from inspection has been reached as a result of a conference between the Virginia Film Commission and R. S. Hebert, of the Fox organization. The latter pointed out that censorship would involve delays that would curtail the news value of these films.

Kill "Blue Laws" in Louisiana
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Baton Rouge, La.—A "blue laws" bill up before the General Assembly has been voted down. The trial for a tax based on gross income for the entertainment industry, which was presented, was defeated, but that was due to the congested condition of the calendar. A special legislative committee of the Amusement Division of the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce helped bring about the defeat of the "blue laws" plan.

No Differences, Says Ralph Ince
Ralph Ince in denying any differences with his brother, Thomas H. Ince said yesterday:

"My brother Thomas H. Ince has been long established and permanently resident at Los Angeles, and my work has kept me in the East. Last winter he came to New York and remained for nearly six months, and during that time we were with each other a great deal and this opportunity for joint associations naturally brought us more closely together than we have been since he went West.

"At no time have we been anything but on the most friendly terms and I never had even heard any intimation that we had 'differences' until the item came out in FILM DAILY."

This publication on Wednesday, stated that Ince had patched up existing differences with his brother.

Cut in Raw Film Tax
Senate Committee Suggests Reducing Levy from Half Cent to Four Tenths Per Foot
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Washington—The Senate Finance Committee of which Senator McNary yesterday voted to offer an amendment in the Senate cutting the excise tax on raw film stock from the McCumber-Forney tariff bill from one half cent per foot to four tenths of a cent per foot.

The bill as adopted by House provided a rate of 20% ad valorem on the American valuation of foreign pictures brought into this country. The Senate has all along favored a method of rates on imported productions as against ad valorem rates and the new plan of the committee will probably prevail.

No changes are recommended in the other provisions of this bill which are concerned with films.

May Call Strike Off
T. O. C. C. and Operators Hold "Get Together" Meeting—Negotiations Are Reopened

The threatened strike of moving picture machine operators may not develop after all.

Samuel Kaplan, president of the operators' union yesterday headed a small group which conferred with the board of directors of the T. O. C. C. and Senator James J. Walker at the T. O. C. C. rooms in the Lowel State building. As a result of the meeting, the following postcards were sent last night to all T. O. C. C. members:

"Negotiations with Operators' Union, Local 406 have been reopened at a friendly meeting today. As a courtesy to the committee, you are requested to defer any other arrangements for operators, pending the conclusion of these negotiations. Regular calls for negotiations will be made at Tuesday's meeting."

In all likelihood, there will be further joint meetings at which it is anticipated the entire controversy will be straightened out.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Rock Island, Ill.—Manager E. R. Clossian, from the First Amusement Co., gives the film manager credit for an original stunt on "Trouble." The window of a prominent retail store was marked for a prominent stunt that was blown through by a siren. It was exhibited as the broken pane that got Jackie Coogan into the film. A ten-cent single used by Clossian was a freehand drawing contest, a specific action that was included in the proper size for window displays later on.

Canton, O.—The Valentine got a good value out of its full page of cooperative ads by mixing the letter in the film name so they were not telling to arrange re-arranged so that the star was. Persons assembling in the squares in their proper order of the actor through the Star-Eagle. This stunt built patronage for the Newpark.

Adrian, Mich.—During the run of "Our Leadering Citizen," Elwood M. Swanson, the popular actor, was told by a local paper to donate 500 gallons of gas to a factory that was shut down. The number was then flashed upon the screen and the owner of the car claimed the prize upon presentation of an autographed card or some identification. The theater has an A-board with a proper arrangement in an effort to increase the draw. The window was supplemented by empty gasoline drums. Simon's intends to work the stunt indefinitely or until the value ceases.

Otumwa, Ia.—A window display tie-up on Jackie Coogan's clothes had been advertised for a prominent store, and posters had been used to attract attention to it with relation to the showing of "My Boy" at the Palace. When there was a delay in the delivery of the outfit which had been used in Des Moines, a problem presented. The energetic and efficient solver, for its solution to the problem, was an idea that was utilized in the display. The window was used for a display of a boy's cap and a man's suit with long trousers. The picture advertising the Jackie Coogan display was left in, but another poster asked "What's Wrong with this Lay Out?" It only needed the reply that Jackie Coogan never wore long trousers to obtain a pass to the theater; but only five people got wise to it with the crowd standing outside the window half the day trying to figure it out. When the real New Gosset ad was put in as it had been originally contemplated and the puzzle was explained.

Des Moines, Ia.—As far as exploitation at the Des Moines is concerned, "Our Leading Citizen" is the one stunt that was a misnomer because the so-called night riders didn't ride but walked. It was doubtfully effective but may have had advance publicity had been given it. At eight o'clock on Saturday night a well-dressed man walked into the theater and sold the "Fall in." Men who had been secreted in doorways, alleys and schon in the wall streamed out upon reception of word that the parade was in line two abreast and parading the streets until midnight. It was the first time night riders ever appeared on local streets and even then they were not well-known to the local police. It defeated by a special dispensation from the local officials. Owing to the fact that the parade had not been mentioned in advance, the local police were ignorant of this permit and the exploitation man in charge was obliged to hand his O. K. from the mayor and city council 15 times during parade.

Every few minutes during a parade the bugler would sound his bugle; and it was a signal for a few late arrivals—purposely held for spectacular effect, to make belated rush into the line. Coincident with the march of the Klan men two boys who followed the parade distributed 15,000 circulars on the cutout of the night rider and it worked. "The Masked Avengers W. Ride Soon to Answer 'One Call.'" From every angle the story was a success, the diversion for the promotion of the show, and having the Klan masked men march was no sensational because it forced attept of the spectators to look it over close while they passed by.

At the city hall our statistician said no less than 120 telephones were turned in notifying council of the night riders' walk. To take immediate action for defense of the community if violators were contemplated. The trousers necessitated in reassuring these authorities gave added publicity to picture.

Introducing
The First Short Subject and Program Building Number

WITH the publication of this issue THE FILM DAILY has taken the first serious step in the industry to place before its readers, in informative form, a resume of accomplishment in the short subject field as well as what the program builder can expect for the coming Fall and Winter.

The task was exacting. Every human effort has been devoted to efficiency and accuracy. The special articles are from the foremost minds in the industry and merit your serious consideration.

It is suggested you file this volume for future reference. It should prove of value to you many times during the coming year.

Jack Alicoate
The Motion Picture Theater of Tomorrow

By S. L. Rothafel
Director, Capitol Theater, New York

Ten years ago I predicted the developments which mark the motion picture of today. Today I shall venture another prophecy. I have seen the motion picture theater grow from a start in little room back of a barroom in a small mining town, where we had to borrow a few chairs from the local undertaker to accommodate our spectators. Even today for me to venture to repeat the old bromide that the picture are in their infancy would be superfluous, though true. In the next ten years, I believe, the motion picture theater will grow to a point which few can foresee.

I prophesy:

That in ten years to come the motion picture will bring a new era; that as an artistic production it will parallel grand opera; that the Government, national, state, municipal, will endow motion picture theaters; that the screen will become the greatest force for the recreation and education of both child and adult; that through it we will become the most cultured nation in the world; that it will develop our musical taste; that it will aid in the creation of American folk song; that it will provide a totally new form of entertainment.

What changes do I expect? Let us begin with the theater structure. The theater of today is entirely inadequate. It is an outgrowth of the old speaking theater, with its relics of stage, boxes, overhanging balcony. The theater of tomorrow will be in the shape of an egg, without a stage and minus balcony, overhanging. It will be larger; it will accommodate perhaps five thousand people at one time; and it will be located out of the heart of the city where real estate rates are cheaper and space more abundant.

Development of present systems of lighting will be the greatest stride in the next five years. In this respect, too, the theater of tomorrow will be different. Projection of light from various parts of the house upon highly sensitized screens will be utilized to gain effects. Color will play a most important part; and this will be in the hands of a single operator stationed somewhere in the orchestra who will play upon a keyboard similar to that of the piano. By this means shades of color and intensities will be varied to suit the mood of the action. By combinations of the primary colors, emotions will be reflected upon the screen, while the music from a symphony orchestra synchronizing with the acting will fuse to make a single impression upon the spectator.

I do not believe that grand opera will ever become popular with the masses in this country. Americans are living too rapidly. They have the tabloid habit; they have no time, no appreciation for leisure. They must have a thrill out of everything. We have experimented at the Capitol Theater to capture their mood. We presented changing colors on the screen as the orchestra played the overture to “Tannhauser” and brought them almost out of their seats by the combination of lights, music, and the picture.

For instance, we have a series of four strips of different kinds of blue corresponding to the octaves on the piano. We called the first octave a certain kind of blue. We had different densities up to that one octave. Each note represented a little lighted graduation, you might call it, running up the scale, so that when we struck a certain note in that octave there was always the same color. Then we had the three primary colors and these were mixed automatically. If we wanted purple we simply threw the red and the blue together and struck whatever note we wanted, getting the exact density of purple desired.

Even on the present ordinary switchboard, we try to play with color as far as our capacity will permit. We are handicapped now by the primary system and the ordinary switches, but by careful development and careful training we have been able to get some very remarkable effects. We have also used colors in conjunction with projection. We have successfully attempted projection on scrim with a tableau background. It was a new thought which was received with a great deal of favor. We were further encouraged to try experiments with scrim work with the aid of projection. This effect was also obtained by means of color.

For the projection we have now developed the high intensity arc, a special filter, and a newly-designed shutter. Tomorrow such apparatus will be so controlled automatically that it will require the most highly trained operators to direct synchronized, sensitized pictures. Today the motion pictures do not constitute an art; they are the result of the fusion of varied abilities. But welded in the future to light, color, music, even odors, we have attempted those too, the pictures will become the highest expression of art that we shall know. I hope that I shall live to see that day.

We are working slowly. The work of the past is but the stepping stone to something much finer and better.
Mack Sennett's new series of comedies now being released through First National are 2-reel features. They need no introduction to you. Everyone knows they are chock full of laughs. The big exhibitors are featuring them on their programs and making money. You can make money too.

The Value of Short Subjects in a Program

By Elmer R. Pearson
General Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The most serious criticism that has been leveled at motion pictures is that based upon the thought that there is too much sameness in them, that one is like another. I consider it highly significant that this criticism is always directed at features. I have yet to hear of an instance where it has been made of short subjects.

We may ascribe most of the attacks upon the morality of the motion picture to those persons who are never happy unless they are crusading against something. It is among them that censorship finds its advocates. But attacks upon the intelligence or entertainment value of pictures demand serious consideration, for they reflect a condition which might well become serious and if not rectified mean a loss of patronage that the business cannot afford to lose. I consider that a more liberal use by exhibitors of short subject programs, selected with a view to diversity, novelty and freshness of subject, and of course all-round quality, to be the best possible antidote to such a condition.

We have, in this business, come to give the feature an importance out of all reason. Not that the feature is not valuable or not needed, but many exhibitors pick their features and then throw in some short subjects as "fillers." The same attention should be given to the short subjects that is given to the feature, and the most successful exhibitors in the country recognize that fact. It frequently happens that the short subjects on a program are the true "draw" for a show, and that the feature gets by because of them. How many times during the past three years has not a short length Harold Lloyd comedy been responsible for the success of a show both at the box office and in the house, while the feature has been an "also ran?" How many times have you and I and all of us heard someone say, "Let's go into such and such a theater and see the Pathe News, anyway?"

Now here at Pathe we are specializing on short subjects. We have some features, and "Nanook of the North" illustrates their quality, but our first and most important consideration is to assure to exhibitors an ample supply of short subjects second to none in the comedy, dramatic, educational and news reel field. It is our purpose to release them so good and in such quantity that any exhibitor, no matter what his patronage or the size of his house, may run short subject programs that will thoroughly please his people and build good will for his house. I am certain that no better entertainment can be found than that afforded by let us say a program made up of the Pathe News, the Pathe Review for a screen magazine, a Pathe Playlet or Pathe serial episode or Range Rider subject for the drama, a Topics of the Day, and a Hal Roach comedy or Harold Lloyd reissue. In a program like that there is diversity, fun, novelty and education pleasantly disguised as entertainment. Isn't it true that it is just those qualities that the exhibitor seeks in each program he puts on?

Now short subject programs are by no means confined to the smaller houses. I am very glad to note that the largest and most successful houses in the country are beginning to see the value of such programs in their own houses. The Symphony Theater of Los Angeles ran a short subject program for forty-four days, using the Harold Lloyd comedy, "Never Weaken," as the star attraction. Rothafel has run short subject programs with great success, and I have heard that he is planning another at the Capitol. Joe Plunkett is another well known showman who has done it with good success. It is not an innovation. It is being done, and where the programs are picked with proper care the results are always most satisfactory.

The exhibitor who runs a feature program regularly should certainly pay the most careful attention to the short subjects on that program. The best of them give as much attention to them as they do to the feature. However there are many who feel that they have paid so much for the feature that they either must omit short subjects of standard quality or else substitute with cheap one reelers that are not up to the mark. Even the big box office feature needs some good short subjects on the same program for diversity and relief. Weaker features will not do the harm they otherwise would if there is a first class short comedy, film magazine and news reel to bolster up the program.

And here is one more thought: there is many a good story which will make a first class two or three reel drama, but which becomes weak if stretched to five or six; there are many good comedy ideas which are good for only one or two reels but would fall flat if carried further. Lack of story material that presses the feature producer is not nearly so much felt by the producer of short subjects. Therefore for the most freshness, novelty and unstereotyped in pictures today, for the most general appeal, look at the short subjects.
And Again Keaton Takes the Honors!

Newspaper critics from coast to coast are reviewing the new Keaton 2 reel pictures as the feature of the show—and real showmen are playing them as such. Read—

BETTER THAN FEATURE

"It would take something a lot better than the feature photoplay at the Rivoli this week, to take the honors of the program away from Buster Keaton's new comedy, 'Cops.' You must see the comedy to learn of these things—and laugh. Ever since the early Keystone Age comedies have wound up with a police chase, but how many comic heroes have mixed themselves up with a police parade and then had the entire force after them? There's novelty in multiplication, as you will see at the Rivoli."—The New York Times.

"COPS" HEADS THE BILL

"Buster Keaton marks an advance in his art in his newest comedy, 'Cops,' which heads the new bill at the California. 'Cops' is just a little bit better than any of the two-reelers the smile-proof comedian has previously given us. 'A laugh every foot,' a description mis-applied to many a comedy, comes literally true in 'Cops.' It was especially selected by Managing Director Roth for the entertainment of the visiting police chiefs."—San Francisco Examiner.

It's Always a Good Show When Keaton Heads the Bill!
Merchandising Through the Box-Office

By E. W. Hammons
President, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

ECONOMIC business conditions in the motion picture industry, as well as other industries of the nation, have caused theater owners to be more introspective than ever before in their business careers.

A great many exhibitors have applied different methods of analysis to their ventures than is the common practice among merchants in other lines; and these exhibitors have been prone to regard their business as a daily business, and to estimate their earnings or their losses on a daily basis, rather than taking an annual or semi-annual inventory of their affairs, and determining their gains or their losses for a given year, as against previous years.

Too often, theater owners, regarding their business as a daily one, get into a mental state of depression and pessimism during summer seasons and off seasons, and over optimistic during the seasons of excellent business. Progressive theater owners today are maintaining accounts of record which will give them an analysis of their business by months, semi-annually, and annually; and, instead of comparing Thursday of the week, for example, with the receipts on Tuesday or Wednesday, they compare the entire month's business with the corresponding month of previous years, and find that, after all, general business conditions taken into consideration, they are in a more healthy condition than they have imagined. The wise exhibitor, in my opinion, is the one who writes off his expenses for the year, on a forty week basis. He is playing safe—a few weeks' depression has no terrors for him.

It is natural for us, being specialists in short subjects only, to regard a motion picture theater from a different angle than the majority of firms in the industry, who are concerned, primarily, with the distribution and sale of feature length productions. For this reason, also, we analyze more carefully, and devote closer scrutiny to short subjects in theater programs throughout the world than possibly any other organization engaged in this business. And it is simply astounding to us the lack of attention the average theater owner gives to the short subject.

For over a year and a half the public, of America at least, have been carefully shopping for motion picture entertainment. They may not be fully conscious of the fact that they are shopping, but they are, nevertheless. For example, thousands of men come home in the evening, and ask the question of the family: "Where shall we go tonight?" The answer is: "Let's go to the movies." If the gentleman then asks: "Where shall we go?" invariably a reply somewhat as follows is given: "When I was shopping for groceries and meats today, I looked at several of the theaters, and I think that the Blank Theater has the best show." The lady in question was shopping just as carefully for motion picture entertainment as she was for the various items of foods that she was buying.

Knowing that this condition is prevalent, it is good showmanship and good merchandising to display all of the motion picture wares you have to offer. A progressive grocer would not, ordinarily, confine a window display to just one line of beans, for example, and utterly ignore every other article he had to sell in the store. Neither would a good dealer in boots and shoes display simply one number from his line, and fail to present in his displays all of the various styles and types of footwear he had to offer the public. This man is selling an entire line, knowing that the public has different tastes, different requirements, and different ideas, and that he must, in his window presentations, and in his advertising, acquaint the public with the fact that he is able to supply any need or meet any idea that his patrons may have.

Motion picture theater owners are striving to get into their theaters the same, identical public, who are the patrons of the corner grocery, the local shoe dealer, the local department store, or any other business venture, and, when every other merchant in the community is talking about his entire line and all of the various things he has to offer, which he believes are of public interest—and for generations he has found that this is the best merchandising policy—it must necessarily follow that a theater owner, purveying entertainment to this same group of patrons, should follow similar lines, because all other merchants of the community have educated his public, long before he was a theater owner, to shop for things the public requires along these lines.

Keep constantly before you the thought that for over a year the public has been in a frame of "thoughtful spending," that now that the unnatural war-time prosperity has departed, and we are entering a period of keen merchandising, it is essential to display your entire line, and to discuss your entire line of entertainment, not only in your newspaper advertisements, but in your theater entrances and wherever else you advertise.

The New Barnum or Hokum Revised

By the Division of Exploitation
Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

There's One Born Every Minute—That's what Barnum said. But a wiser man arose in Abraham Lincoln, who concluded, "You can't fool all of the people all the time." Barnum could pull his tricks and get out of town before he had to "hold the bag." Besides the public has been fooled so often that they are looking for tricks of some sort from show people. A good way to fool them is not to fool them at all. So the Lincoln kind of a showman is in order—the square-shooter, the manager who earns the reputation of honor, confidence, integrity, and cleanliness for the theater.

Fifty-Fifty Exploitation—Fifty-fifty means half. And exhibitors have cut their advertising bills in two, and achieved twice the results by getting some other business to advertise with them. Merchants have gladly given their windows for cooperative displays—locations that could not be bought, have been landed without spending a single cent. Newspapers have given front pages free of charge to contests and newspaper stunts publicizing the theater and at the same time building circulation. But try and buy an ad on the front page. Merchants have gladly gone in for cooperative newspaper advertising grouping their products ads under a caption giving a big flash for the picture. The soundness of this idea is that the theater always goes to newspaper and the merchant with a 50-50 proposition. The theater asks for nothing. It offers something for something. And that's good business.

Catching Them On the Run—Mr. Exhibitor, you have just a second and a half to sell your stuff. Sorry. But that's all the time you have. The average man isn't just waiting to hear theater talk. The theater is probably the last thing on his mind. You have to hit him over the head, smash him between the eye or knock him off his feet. In politer language, you have to catch him "on the run."

The recognition of this truth means you must edit advertising in the direction of simplicity. You have only time to say one thing. Find out what is the most important thing, and say it. Saying too much in an ad or a display is worse than saying too little. Too much ruins all there is. Too little at least arouses curiosity.

Street Stuff—One hundred per cent of any locality are potential theatergoers. How are you going to reach them all? Through the newspapers? Yes and no. The newspapers are read by about twenty per cent, which is almost too high to be true. Ten per cent is nearer the correct estimate. And how many of these newspaper readers pay much attention to the theater notices and ads? Not many, so your percentage is further decreased. Again the "catch them on the run" principle is required. Heavy billing, good lobbies, heralds, and throwaways are all mediums through which you reach that eighty per cent the newspapers can't touch.

Word-of-Mouth—The greatest advertising machine in the world can be had for almost nothing, although you can't buy it with a fortune. Get the people talking. A good lobby can do this, a novel essay contest, unusual newspaper ads, heavy billing, personal letters to prospective patrons all contribute to this.

Any unique touch to advertising, especially when it gets a laugh, starts the conversation. Talk's not cheap. You have to woo it with much skill, and when you get it you can't keep the folks away from your doors. It's easy to get the children talking. Special matinees, or souvenirs that they will treasure will just about put your picture over.

Good Taste—The exhibitor must also be an artist. The heads of large theaters are veritable DeMilles among managers. You can't exploit a delicate artistic work like "The Loves of Pharaoh" with slapstick methods. The exploitation must be consistent with the plot, theme, and atmosphere of the picture, or the more refined of your patrons will be repelled.

Making News—Newspaper editors object to theatrical publicity with a lot of superlatives, with the old pap about "visions of beauty," "tense, thrilling episodes," and the old phrases of the press agent. They have been printed so often they don't mean anything. Paramount press material includes stories with a genuine news interest which will be printed and read for their own sake. It is possible to break a story on a local angle tying up with the picture. During the run of "Is Matrimony a Failure?" the Paramount exploiters gathered statistics showing the marriages, divorces, births and deaths of the community, as an answer to the question asked by the title. Papers used this on their front pages.

The Big Three—There are three tests of exploitation beyond which "there ain't no more,"—a stunt, ad, poster, or story must first arrest attention; second, arouse curiosity; and third, create desire. Does your exploitation meet these requirements?

The Proof Is Not in the Padding

by Carl Laemmle
President, Universal Film Manufacturing Co.
(Written before his departure for Europe)

FOR many years Universal produced and distributed serials in fifteen and eighteen episode lengths. Some of these serials were shown in as many as six thousand theaters. Some months ago it was brought forcibly to the attention of serial makers that the "kill 'em quick" serial, depending for its drawing power solely on thrills and trick photographic stunts, was growing more and more in disfavor. Many cities absolutely barred serials from their theaters. Others insisted on rigid censorship of the material shown.

It was realized that it was only a question of a short time when serials would be forced off the market unless very radical changes were made. The history of the picture business shows that Universal was the only producer to make a radical change in the constitution of its serials.

Universal made a serial based on history. It was called "Winners of the West" and was the story of Capt. John Fremont's famous expedition into California in 1848. To date Universal has made the only historical serials. Everybody knows the wonderful success of "Winners of the West." This serial broke all Universal booking records, and shattered theater records of years standing in hundreds of cities.

"Winners of the West" was followed with a story of the discovery of David Livingstone in Darkest Africa in 1871. "With Stanley in Africa" was a true picture of one of the most romantic quests of modern times. "Robinson Crusoe" was next released. Next month will see the release of the serial "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," a story of the building of the Union Pacific and incidents in the life of the great plainsman, Buffalo Bill.

All of these serials have a reason for their production, outside of the idea of providing a series of harrowing thrills. Exhibitors today don't want pictures that make children wake up in the middle of the night in terror. The old serial has seen its day.

"The test of the pudding is not in the padding." In other words serials without padding. Each serial will be in the length called for in the story, and no longer. No longer will a faint idea be padded out to two thousand feet of film. Universal will not attempt to make a serial in any set number of episodes. When the story is told, the serial will stop. It may be eight episodes—it may be ten—it may be fifteen—it may be more.

There is only one way to make a serial and that is to make it from a completed story. If the story is written by a writer of national fame, and many will be, so much the better. Exhibitors today insist that serials be built along the lines of the best of the current literature of the day.

In addition to serials in the natural length of the story, Universal will cast for the leading parts well known star actors peculiarly fitted for the parts they are called on to play. Harry Myers was the best man that could be selected for the part of Robinson Crusoe. William Desmond made an ideal mining engineer in "The Perils of the Yukon." Art Acord, probably the greatest horseman in the west today, plays the part of the dashing cowboy "In the Days of Buffalo Bill." Roy Stewart is the radio detective in "The Radio King."

Universal serials in the future will be in the exact footage, called for in the story. Serials will be released as few as six episodes if the story can be properly told in that footage. Some serials may take fifteen or even eighteen episodes to tell the story properly. But there will be no padding.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill" is a historical story that contains as much picture material as three or four ordinary serials. It is full of thrilling and exciting incidents but these are the exciting moments that history tells us were the life of the early pioneers on the American frontier. A two reel excerpt from this serial has been shown in the public school systems of New York, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, San Francisco, St. Louis, Omaha and others, and created an overwhelming demand on the part of educators for the showing of this picture in completed form to the school children.

Universal is on record that the schools of the country could depend on its producing a type of picture that not only would thrill and please adolescent children but would teach them such lessons as history, biology, inventions and geography.

Universal's new serial plans call for a number of short serials. These are to be serials with all-star casts, selected to fit parts in well-written stories.

Universal will not produce serials in any set length. When the story is told, the serial ends. Exhibitors will not tolerate longer padding out a few time-worn thrills into a serial. If the story isn't there, there isn't any serial.

The proof of the pudding is not in the padding!
Giving Comedies a Chance to Draw

By Al Christie
President Christie Film Co.

The exhibitors of America who this year are advertising the good comedies and other short subjects which they are playing are writing moving picture history. Perhaps they do not realize just what this means, not only in the definite box-office value which entire-bill advertising brings, but in showing the great American public that theaters are doing more and more as the weeks pass to give patrons their money's worth in diversified entertainment.

I never maintained that comedies should be played just because comedies have been a habit in the early days of the picture business or just because it seems logical to have some comedy on the bill, but I do claim most heartily that "good comedies" should be played and should be advertised because a 'good clean comedy is just one more string to the theater man's bow. It is just one more drawing card, which, if advertised, will pull at the place where the money comes in.

We are basing our whole future business on the fact that the best theaters are advertising comedies; on the fact that they are selling varied entertainment. Two years ago we said: "If a comedy is worth playing, it is worth advertising." As a producer of comedies, I haven't a complaint in the world as to widespread bookings, in fact 100% showings, and I take off my hat to the fellows who are taking advantage of what they've booked by selling it to the public. I don't mean putting up a couple of ones and threes out in front and letting it go at that, but I mean using every medium which the theater has to include the good comedy attractions. There are the newspaper ads, part of the space on billboards, a little of the space on the display of electricity out in front and all other forms, where just a little space will enable the theater to sell the public that it has a little something extra on the bill to attract its attention, and to entertain it, and send the whole family away with a smile.

I don't think comedies should be billed over the longer features except in very exceptional cases, but I do maintain that all good comedies should be given a share in the advertising. For instance, managers from several of the biggest theaters in the country have recently sent us word that certain of our comedies were "knockouts" in their houses. Yet, knockout or no knockout, I should hesitate to bill this on the top line in advertising if I were a manager, but I would promise the patrons a laugh. I would promise an added attraction. Then when they come out smiling and talking to each other about the comedy, I would know I had made good.

The phrase "And a comedy" is rapidly becoming a thing of the past, because the public has shown us that it is just as much inclined to shop for its comedies and other short subjects as it is for its features and its music.

I have been more than repaid for all the years I have built with one idea in mind, by my recent trip back from New York after visiting Europe when I saw the reception being given in different centers to my latest comedy, "Cold Feet." Seeing this—just one comedy out of a series of two-reelers—attracting more attention than a whole series of features which we might have made, I'm glad I didn't desert the two-reeler for the making of the longer pictures.

We want to branch out; we want to try new pictures in the two-reeler. The old, hackneyed subjects in comedies have to be thrown away. We want to give the public something different in their short entertainment.

The public is bored at the old stuff in features, but I believe they are more easily bored by the old gags in comedy. For the same reason, our Friend Public—and he is friendly if we play fair with him—is twice as pleased when we hit the mark and give him something new in comedy. When we do, we can get up on our hind legs and advertise it proudly.

The whole world loves a laugh just as well as it loves a lover, and when we know we've got a good one to slip to the waiting world I feel like shouting about it. Because if you promise amusing entertainment in the advertising and make good, they'll stop at the door on the way out to tell you about it.

At present when an exhibitor uses the phrase "and a comedy" or doesn't mention comedy in his advertising he falls into the class which is on the down grade and which is slipping out of the industry fast. I don't care whether it is my comedy or the other fellow's comedy, it deserves to get its proper chance to pull in the public. There's an old expression—

"A man is known by the company he keeps."

You might well say, a theater is known by its advertising in the newspaper.

Show me a theater man's advertising and I will tell you what kind of a theater he is running.

TORCHY COMEDIES

“BATTLING TORCHY.” “Here’s a winner.” It is not only one of the most enjoyable of the Torchy Comedies, but it is a worthy competitor of any comedy on the market. C. C. Burr has continually offered consistent laugh-getters, and Johnny Hines was never seen to better advantage than in “Battling Torchy.” The story is a good one in the first place, the titles are funny without punning, and there are high class gags following one another in rapid fire order. Few prize fight scenes have been done more realistically or amusingly than that which occupies the latter half of the second reel of “Battling Torchy.”—Matt Taylor in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

. . . “whose work in ‘Battling Torchy’ has won the unanimous and hearty approval of every critic who has viewed the picture.”—REEL FACTS.

“TORCHY TAKES A CHANCE.” . . . “An amusing comedy built around a lottery ticket that wins a prize. The gags follow one another in rapid succession, the business is clever and no time wasted. ‘Takes a Chance’ is one of the best of the series, and will entertain any audience. It is full of good comedy work and has an abundance of laughs.”—THE FILM DAILY.

“TORCHY TAKES A CHANCE.” . . . “Was the comedy feature at the New York Strand for the week of March 5 . . . The picture was well received by a large afternoon house . . . And one of the cleverest pictures made by the popular ‘Torchy’ of the screen, played last week at the Strand theatre.”—EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

“TORCHY’S KNIGHTHOOD,” with Johnny Hines. “A corking good comedy. All of the Torchy subjects are well received here.”—H. J. Graybill, Family theatre, Bridgeport, Ohio.—NEIGHBORHOOD PATRONAGE.

“TORCHY’S KNIGHTHOOD,” with Johnny Hines. “BANG, this went over good to a Saturday crowd. This and all Torchys have pleased to date.”—J. F. Rees, Regal Theatre, Wellsville, Mo.—NEIGHBORHOOD PATRONAGE.

“TORCHY A LA CARTE,” with Johnny Hines. “A very enjoyable comedy. Plenty of stunts. It kept them laughing from beginning to end.”—H. J.

“DOG-GONE TORCHY,” with Johnny Hines. “A dandy. Some new baby stunts and one of the cutest little stenographers ever ‘released’ in this two-reel comedy.”—D. A. Kooker, Happy Hour theatre, Ewen, Mich.—GENERAL PATRONAGE.

How Short Reels Aid in Program Building

By Hugo Riesenfeld
Managing Director, Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion Theaters, New York

The public is well informed as to the production of photoplays, the details of the scenario, the casting, the photography, the creation of settings and costumes and how all the arts are brought together to give the world the finest that the screen art is capable of.

But the work of the exhibitor is not so well known. The producer creates the motion picture, the exhibitor prepares it for the public. We come into the class of contouirers—we dress it up. When the picture is beautiful as a pretty girl, we are lavish in our decorations; when the picture is not so fine we try to cover up the defects with veils and other bits of camouflage.

While the feature film is to us—and also to the public—the center of interest around which all other efforts center, it is my intention to speak rather of the trimmings than the feature film. It is about the shorter subjects, the prologues, the music and the short-reel subjects that I want to say a few words, and to point out that, while it is important to know what to do, it is just as important to know what to avoid.

With the feature film as the center, the program may reflect it in the preceding or following numbers, or may be made up of different themes. For instance, if the locale of the feature film is laid in Spain, we might use an overture by a Spanish composer or a composition with Spanish color. The next number might be a scene showing interesting or characteristic places in Spain. By this time the audience will be ready for a prologue to the feature film. Here a street scene in Madrid, or a garden in Seville—with singers and dancers—might be used, always bearing in mind that the character of the feature film must determine the choice of details.

Again, if the feature film is highly dramatic and the following number is a hilarious comedy, it will be necessary to bridge the space between the two pictures with a sort of compromise—and the best compromise is a musical number, instrumental or vocal. Whenever I face this problem of bridging between two distinctly different tempi, I recall the evening when I went to a vaudeville theater to see Sarah Bernhardt. The Divine Sarah, who appeared in the most dramatic scenes of her great successes, was preceded by a troupe of trained seals. Trained seals as a prologue to Bernhardt!

That is what we must avoid—too great a repetition of theme over several numbers and too great variety.

One of our greatest aids in bridging numbers, besides music, are the hundreds and thousands of short reel subjects. If I were inclined to make a catalogue of short films I would divide them into three great classes. The first I would call the historic film; the second would be the nature, and the third the dramatic picture. This latter class, while it also includes the feature film, is composed of the short cartoon comedy, the slap-stick farce comedies, the one or two-reel dramatic film and the dance films.

The news films or the historic pictures, have become the basis of the so-called “weeklies.” At the Rialto we call it a magazine, at the Rivoli it is called a pictorial, but they are the same in purpose. To my mind the “weekly” has done a great work in education. The value of visual teaching cannot be over-estimated. To the few, to those hungry for knowledge, a dip into books and a search in a library, or the study through ear and memory is none too difficult. But to the great mass, education, knowledge of the great world around us, must come sugar-coated and the screen is the excellent sugar coating for valuable information. In other words, the news picture—the historical picture—gives to the man of today a larger perspective, a more sweeping view of what is going on about him. When the public universally adopt the motion picture as a means of education, the news and scientific films will have come into their real great work.

And finally, the short dramatic subjects, the comedies, the dance films, the cartoons—all of them invaluable aids to bring the necessary variety or similarity into a program. The three classes of short films may be used in connection with the “weekly” or as a “bridge.” They may appear on the program as a bit of historic prologue as was done with “The Golem.” Scenes of Venice recently made a delightful introduction to the Barcarolle from “Tales of Hoffman,” in much as it was Venice which inspired Offenbach to write the opera.

I have barely sketched in what the possibilities are in program creation. Now I want to add a few words about that other field of art—music—which has accomplished more than its most devoted friends hoped for. It is hardly necessary for me to point out that the presence of something like 500 additional orchestras in this country, ranging from ten to fifty or sixty trained musicians, has developed in the American public a taste for music which had died down in the last 25 years—and a knowledge of music that is growing with startling rapidity.

When the Rialto opened six years ago we played such overtures as “Poet and Peasant,” and the more spectacular and semi-popular selections. Today we give Tchaikovsky, Liszt, Wagner, Dukas, Saint-Saens and Enescu. At the big picture theaters the patrons hear operatic arias, see esthetic dancing, listen to excellent chamber music soli and see artistic settings. And the result has been that the public has learned to like these things—it has become familiar with the better compositions, been delighted by the settings and dance numbers.

This remarkable progress of the fine arts would have been impossible without the motion picture. The audiences paid their money to see feature films and other pictures—unconsciously it learned to like the incidental “bridges” which we use as “bridges,” as prologues, as colorful beads in the necklace of gems and pendants.

The Arrival of the Short Subject—and Why

By George L. Levine
General Manager, Short Product for Universal

I AM an evolutionist on this subject. The chance has been given me to develop different ideas I have nursed for several years and I hope to prove to the trade that this field, so long regarded as a side issue, ranks side by side with the big feature if properly explored.

I know from experience that the big houses are hungry for short product of quality, and Mr. Laemmle was quick to recognize this fact two years ago when the feature business throughout the United States showed an inclination to rest up, and the short product shot into action. The result of Mr. Laemmle's keen insight of the possibilities of the short product, was a complete divorce of short product from the feature department in the Universal organization, with a separate staff of general managers, managers, salesmen and publicity departments.

And most important of all, an enormous investment in short product production, cautious selection of stories, separate cast of talent, and carte blanche to increase the output and spare no effort to establish the fact that the short subject has arrived.

The first step was to change the old order of producing serials that had nothing to recommend them to the intelligence of the audience. Instead of the old hide-and-go-seek bunk, screen novels have been introduced by Universal, called serials if you wish, and I might mention as an illustration that our "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" is regarded as a positive revelation in the serial field.

The new method is based on the length of time the story will sustain interest, and if it requires only seven or eight episodes to tell the story, the length of the screen novel will be determined accordingly. This idea does away with the unnecessary padding and nerve racking long drawn out agonies we're all sick to death of.

"The Leather Pushers" with Reginald Denny, is just the beginning of our new campaign with regard to two reelers, and the success we are meeting with these subjects has stimulated us to the highest pitch of ambition to make the two reel feature in itself instead of a filler. Our West Coast studios are hard at work on this proposition and have promised us a variety of the best two reel box office attractions that have ever been turned out on the lot.

Our Century Comedies have always been above par, while we can boast of first-runs in nearly all the big houses in the United States, we won't be satisfied until we've booked 'em all. This means that we are going to strive harder than ever to reach the highest degree of excellence and quality of merriment. We have wonderful material to work with in Baby Peggy, Brownie, the Wonder Dog, Johnny Fox, Lee Moran and last, but not least, Queenie, the greatest trick horse on the screen. With the rapid strides we are making on these comedies, it's only a question of a short time when Century Comedies will be the feature attraction instead of the comedy, in the first-run houses.

Two reel westerns are becoming a very important and indispensable proposition to the exhibitor. Whereas a couple of years ago the western was regarded as a filler, our financial returns show that they are rapidly coming into favor in the big houses, in fact, sharing honors with the feature.

However, there's lots of room for improvement in the matter of exploitation of this part of the short product. In the old days, when the two reel feature was the order of the day, exploitation was as important as the picture itself. Every inch of space on the front of the theaters shrieked about the two reel feature being shown—even the electric light bulbs were weighted down with exploitation stunts. Now it's different, we've gone to the other extreme with two reel subjects. Maybe the idea was overdone in the old days, but it was the right idea and it should be revived, particularly on two reel westerns.

Our fall policy with regard to International News has been very well taken care of. R. V. Anderson in charge of this special department, informs us that our European connections have been re-arranged, and that we may anticipate more exclusive pictures such as we received during the lifetime of Pope Benedict—the Lenine and Trotsky regime—the first airplane flight over the Alps, etc.

At the present time we have exploitation men in every one of our exchanges to help the salesmen put over the big features and short product. The exploitation man's work begins after the salesman lands the contract, and the exhibitor is freed from all worry and work of putting the picture on properly. It's the duty of the exploitation man to see that the picture is advertised and offered to the public with the proper trimmings, and the idea is working splendidly. It will only be a short time before our hard work and concentration on the general uplift of short product will convince the exhibitor that no show is complete without short subjects.
The Prologue in the Case

By Joseph Plunkett
Managing Director, Mark Strand Theater, New York City

WHENEVER exhibitors of America's fourth or fifth largest industry—more power to them—hold a confab and in beneficent moods exchange the innermost secrets of program presentation, much wrangling over the subject of the prologue is bound to ensue. Certain indomitable traits are inherent in most exhibitors—they love to feel that theirs is the best method of presentation and are not satisfied with being a step or two removed from this enormous ambition. This is a commendable characteristic, indeed, and not easily found in any other American field of endeavor. Though I am one of the brood, I shall attempt to be different this time by being less recalcitrant; I merely shall offer my views in the following, which may be regarded in any light but not disputed because they are based on experience alone. But to grant a concession I will say that it is quite possible for experiences to differ.

It is apparent from the foregoing that I am prologue. Whatever has been said derogatorily of the prologue, I have sought to overrule; but reiteration is sometimes necessary. I have read on one or two occasions of several people who have designed to express themselves rather dubiously on this subject, its intrinsic value as a subsidiary factor to good picture presentation. It seems to me that reason for this, their doubtful attitude, is attributable to the fact that the true meaning of the word prologue is very often misinterpreted. Once the prologue becomes unequivocal to all, it will serve all as invariably as it has served the Mark Strand theater.

Evidently the general impression seems to be that a prologue must of a necessity be a replica of a certain scene or anything else, no matter how irrelevant, from the photoplay which it precedes. It must not. A prologue should—and must, to earn the right to be called that and to be of value—be representative of the style or type of photoplay it is to serve as an introduction. It must typify the locale for one, be atmospheric, strike a note of symbolism and suggest the nature of the picture that is to follow. Here it must stop!

But in a desperate effort to create atmosphere some have instead been accustomed to present such material that either bears no resemblance to the theme or which is a direct extract from the picture. The latter of the two mistakes oftimes reveals enough of the plot to destroy the desired illusion and thus kill the suspense, and is therefore impracticable. Imagine a producer spending hundreds of thousands in the making of a picture, leading up to the grand denouement of his story by many months of toil, only to have the climax shattered by a faulty prologue. An exhibitor may, with the best of intentions, do injury to both the producer and the audience. Which goes to prove that there are prologues and prologues, just as there are exhibitors and exhibitors.

The prologue may be overworked, too, but the danger is slight. The only time prologue idea will jar is when there is a constant repetition of the same scenery, soloists, music or other embellishments. It is even a necessity when the preliminary scenic picture is Chinese in character, for instance, and the exhibitor must switch to his feature picture of the Alaskan wilds. The climactic transition is so expansive that the shock which the spectator receives may be compared with that of a speeding car of which the brakes have suddenly been jammed on. It is here as well as in innumerable other instances that the prologue is an excellent medium. And as long as good prologues can be presented intelligently they will be successful and their life interminable.

I am not overlooking the fact that "the picture is the thing," and if it is in my power to enhance the picture's value with a prologue that can be perfect in any way, I doubt whether it is my duty NOT to do so since I would be rendering a service to the producer, the theater and, most important of all, the audience, without whom I would not be writing this to-day.

Brevity in footage, namely, the short reel, is as praiseworthy as it is in wit. The phrase "short, pithy and to the point" is now applicable to most of the short reels on the market because their producers realize that is the only way to make them presentable, and that, too, is the only form in which spectators will accept them. So efficient is their production and so great is the popular demand for them, that I have been compelled to present an entire program consisting of short reel features at intervals of seven or eight weeks.

The success most of the exhibitors have met with in such departures is traceable to the care they have expended on the short reel. The short reel is not to be slighted simply because it is lacking in footage. It can be made to serve as entertainingly as the big feature picture if it is allotted the same preliminary attention. By this I mean that exhibitors ought not to neglect the possibilities of giving it as splendid a musical embodiment as it is customary for the lengthy film to receive.

Essentials in House Management

By John Matthews, Herman Landwehr, Edward Douglas Resident Staff, Capitol Theater, New York

Each week the Capitol Theater entertains from 75,000 to 90,000 persons. Making these people comfortable, extending to them the courtesy that will make them cultivate the theater as a weekly habit, ushering and changing the huge crowds that fill the theater is a big job. Yet it is doubtful whether a more courteous, efficient system of house conduct can be found than that which exists at the world's largest theater.

Perhaps the important factor behind the success of the system is the esprit de corps which S. L. Rothafel has established among the house attendants. We believe that we have the finest, cleanest, snappiest and best-mannered uniformed staff of house attendants of any theater in the world. It consists of six doormen, thirty ushers, five chief ushers, ten page boys and two chief pages.

When a new man is added to the staff he is given a copy of the house rules. Among other things these rules require him to be punctual, obliging and courteous at all times; to refrain from social conversation or activities during the discharge of his duties; to be immaculate in his person and irreproachable in his demeanor. The management employs no "experienced" men. In other words, we prefer to take young men who are fresh and impressionable and train them according to the ideals of the theater. When a new man is taken on, he must begin at the bottom of the ladder. Promotion is given according to merit only. An usher may advance himself to the position of house manager. The present managers have risen from the ranks.

Twice a week the men report for physical training and military drills which helps the men to carry themselves with dignity and snap and to attend to their duties promptly and efficiently. Their morale is kept to the highest pitch by organized athletics, a baseball team, a basketball team, institutional lectures and regular inspection by Mr. Rothafel, and monthly bonuses for the most meritorious service given during the month. Recently a school of motion picture presentation was established for the benefit of the ushers and attachés by which we hope to still further strengthen their institutional pride and spirit.

The comfort and convenience of the patron is of paramount importance. "The patron is always right." This principle is strictly adhered to. A patron must never be argued with, no matter how unreasonable. They must be appeased and satisfied at any cost. Another point which helps to make friends of the patrons is to have the staff well-informed. So many people want to know what time the different units are presented, when the feature goes on, when the orchestra plays, etc. etc. Questions should be answered courteously always, and every attempt made to send the patron away completely satisfied.

While many managers do not seem to consider the position of doorman of much importance, it must be remembered that the doorman is the first attaché the patron comes in contact with and the first reception has much to do with the general impression. The men whom we place on the doors at the Capitol are carefully selected with two traits of character uppermost in mind—natural inborn courtesy and absolute honesty.

The system under which our doormen work has been found to be the most satisfactory. Of the six doormen, one is chief and another assistant. The men are directly under the supervision of the chief who is held responsible for the proper performance of their duties. When he is off duty, his assistant takes charge. Two doormen and the chief go on duty at twelve o'clock and are relieved at three o'clock for dinner, then report back at five and finish at nine-thirty. The other shift, two doormen and the assistant chief go on duty at two o'clock and work until five, then go to supper and return to work at seven and finish at ten-thirty. One man remains each night to close the house. These shifts change each week. During the rush periods all six men are on duty.

The "break" in the performance must be handled systematically or it becomes a riot. At the Capitol a system as regular as army routine was installed by Mr. Rothafel when he first took over the house. It has worked efficiently in some nerve-testing, record-breaking experiences. The "break" occurs at the end of our first show—about 9:30 P. M. The most difficult "breaks" occur on Sundays and holidays. Our ushers avoid a great deal of trouble by suggesting to patrons "To the right please"; "You will get out much easier and quicker, please." The "please" is essential and gets recognition, where a peremptory order goes unheeded. If an usher tries to make crowds rush and does so obviously there is trouble. Mob苯 will listen to courteous, reasonable instructions.

Another important phase of managing a theater is that of keeping the house scrupulously clean. We start cleaning the Capitol after the last show at night by turning up every seat. At 6 o'clock in the morning the cleaning staff comes on duty and by 12:00 the house is thoroughly cleaned and inspected.
The Talk of the Trade!

Century Comedies are the sensation of the picture world. And deservedly so. Once every week you receive in your Century a corking good comedy. Once every week you get a two reel picture that is better and funnier than the preceding one. Not once in a while—but once every week. They're consistently good. The Nation's Favorite Scheherazade Was Right

By Edgar O. Brooks
Serial Sales Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

NOTHING is more true in connection with the output of motion picture entertainment than that a very worth-while percentage of the public continuously demands episode stories—serials. These are the same people who, as recent history abundantly proved, withdrew their support from newspapers and magazines which make the mistake of dropping their "continued story" attraction.

To-day this type of printed fiction in popular newspapers and periodicals is greater in volume and better in quality, generally speaking, than ever before. The reason for that is also the reason why the experienced motion picture serial producer and distributor has used every endeavor to improve and standardize his product—the certain loss of profit resulting from any other course.

The big lesson was learned by several of the most important magazine publishers only a few years ago when shortly after they had ordered their editors to discontinue the use of novels in serial form, their circulations fell off with alarming rapidity. There was no doubt about the cause—readers by thousands in canceling their subscriptions declared bluntly that the only reason why they had been subscribers was their interest in the serial story, now discontinued.

Whereupon the continued story feature was promptly restored.

All of which proves that Scheherazade, heroine of the immortal "Arabian Nights Entertainments," was right when she invented the "continued in our next" romance as the only available means of inducing the Sultan to permit her pretty head to remain on her lovely shoulders.

From that day down to this the fascination exerted by the device of interrupting the telling of a story at a critical scene and announcing its resumption in "our next," has steadily increased, rather than diminished. The greatest fiction writers of all nations have applied it in the issuing of some of their best works—such novelists, for example, as Walter Scott, Charles Dickens, Victor Hugo, Alexandre Dumas and Eugène Sue. It is one of the highlights of literary history that the two novelists last named kept half the population of Paris up until the early hours of the morning eagerly for the next issue of the great newspaper that was printing daily installments of "The Memoirs of a Physician" and "The Wandering Jew." And—according to the abilities of the authors—the same spectacle has been repeated often in France, England and America down to the present.

The to-be-continued-in-our-next story—when it is a good story and cleverly arranged to produce the maximum amount of hold-over suspense agony—has fastened its grip more and more firmly on the affections of the multitude. Magazines and "family story papers" can't exist without it. Big daily newspapers are solving real life domestic problems with epitomized forms of it.

Wise motion picture producers were quick to utilize its advantages; and it has lately been figure out that many motion picture exhibitors credit sixty per cent of their profits to their bookings of the best serial pictures obtainable. They are discovering that the successive episodes of such serials, duly announced, have genuine "feature" drawing power; and in this way the capable serial producer finds his product actually invading the field formerly exclusively occupied by the multiple-ree idrama or spectacle.

The story-telling art of the motion picture is too new to have possessed itself to the full of the experience of writers and publishers of printed fiction; but it has a drawing power which printed fiction lacks, and this fact is most apparent in the case of the thrilling, yet clean and wholesome, standardized fifteen-episode motion picture serials released in the last twelve months. Picture patrons, exhibitors and reviewers unite in expressing satisfaction with these examples of the latest stage in the evolution of the filmed chapter play. They are the result of experience gained in the production and distribution of more than thirty serials of this length during the last ten years, plus a settled determination to provide realism, forceful dramatic action and a generous supply of thrilling physical "stunts" combined in stories that are clean and in every way in line with developing public taste.

This describes the New Era Patheserial in fifteen episodes, which General Manager Elmer Pearson recently announced was "here to stay." The specific examples referred to, which are enjoying exhibitor and public support fully warranting Mr. Pearson's declaration, are: "Hurricane Hutch" and "Go-Get-Em Hutch" with Charles Hutchison, and "White Eagle" and "The Timber Queen" with Ruth Roland. Hutchison has practically completed another called "Speed," while Ruth Roland is well along with her current production, "The Riddle of the Range." Pearl White has returned from Paris to carry out her new contract with Pathe and is the star in a serial called "Plunder" now being filmed by Producer George B. Seitz.

THE pleasure of touring the country last season as guest conductor in the large motion picture theaters, and coming in contact with exhibitors, managers, producers and orchestra conductors in the various cities, has afforded me an opportunity of making a few observations regarding the combination of music and films.

Music as an attraction for picture theaters has come to stay. With the passing of the tin-pan piano, the three piece orchestra—piano, bench and cover—with the erection of these tremendous film theaters, an adequate music program must be rendered. Patrons expect it and enjoy it. What is known as presentation is here for all times, for the people have learned to love the good because they have been made familiar with it. It has not been an evolution of music and the films but really a revolution. The progress has been so swift, the strides so great, that it is staggering to contemplate the great change. Time was when music was turned out in a picture theater only to drown the noise of the old-time projection machines. Whereas the music of that day drove the people away, to-day the music is a real attraction, sharing honors with the film.

That is one phase of the subject—the music that is heard daily in the picture theaters. In this country where art is dependent on private enterprise, the achievement of the film theaters is a colossal task. They have spread music to the masses in greater numbers than all the symphony orchestras put together. To hear a Beethoven overture, or a Liszt Rhapsody four times daily—think of it and you will realize how puny the efforts of the symphony orchestras become in the face of such vast appeal. And because the motion picture theaters have raised the standard of the patrons to a higher level, and are giving the patrons good music—for this the musician is duly grateful. He is gradually coming into his own with the film theaters as his medium of expression.

Another phase of the subject is music for the films. I once wrote the music for a film. It went admirably at first but I soon found that the picture had been cut and that the operator had been given orders to speed up the running of the film. This had not been told me so the natural result was that while my love theme was being played the villain was murdering a dozen people and my poor lovers were in fond embrace while the orchestra was playing a march.

To-day music to the films is being adjusted—in mosaic fashion. But the time will come when the music for the picture will be part of the picture. I wanted two minutes for a love theme, which isn't very long for such a theme but which is very long for a picture. However, the producer and the musician must get together and the music, if necessary will be written right on the lot and scenes will be shot to fit the music.

In other words a real grand opera, must be written for the motion picture of to-day. In Los Angeles, a half dozen producers and directors asked me to write scores for their pictures but I found that these pictures would be released in three or four weeks. Of course, it could not be done conscientiously in such a short time.

The motion picture industry has done a great thing for music and what they have done for music will come back to them at the box office and in public approval.

The motion picture theaters have developed their own type of musicians—I mean by that a man must be adequately trained in order to properly accomplish the scoring of a picture or even the conducting of the classics in motion picture theaters. A specialist in this field should start a training school for motion picture musicians and give them the knowledge of the required technique. That is one thing that I have found lacking in the motion picture industry as far as its music is concerned.

I also look for the entry of our great concert and operatic artists into the motion picture theater. I believe that these picture houses will offer them commercially and artistically the appreciative field that they now enjoy in concert halls. Artistically the motion picture theaters are a genuine joy for the artists for the great myriads that come to the motion picture theater are keenly enthusiastic for good music and they are thankful for the artists that come to the picture theater and bring good music within the reach of the masses because of the popular prices that prevail in motion picture theaters. Whereas the two dollar and two and a half dollars price prevails at concerts, the public will soon have an opportunity of hearing these same artists at fifty and seventy-five cents, and this is a monumental accomplishment for which the artistic camaraderie is grateful.

The development is constant and grows daily and will continue until the marriage of music and films becomes more firmly cemented.

Applied Theories of Presentation

By Edward L. Hyman
Managing Director, The Mark Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y.

To say, that in building programs, the feature is the first and all-important consideration, is archaic. I contend that if the diversified programs now offered in some first, second and even third run houses, were inaugurated five years ago, the enthusiasm of the public for motion pictures would have forever remained unmitigated. The paucity of dyed-in-the-wool fans during the past few years I lay to the short-sightedness of those exhibitors who gorged their patrons with feature pictures. When exhibitors angle for patronage by playing "double feature" programs they burn their business candle at both ends. Because the theater clientele has been over-satiated with features, some of which set high standards and were not consistently upheld, it now takes a genuinely extra-ordinary production to induce even the smallest sign of enthusiasm to come from them. Fans have now become hard-boiled critics.

These are the prime justifiers of my statement—that features have been relegated, by producers who failed to issue good pictures consistently, and exhibitors who gorged their public on the good and bad, to a place where the public no longer uses them as the sole dictator as to whether or not they shall buy a ticket. No matter how well a piece I may put on the Brooklyn Mark Strand's program may be received, I never deal it sufficiently to make the patron anesthetic to its chassis. I believe with the scientists, who say that we should rise from the table with our appetites an atom from appeasement.

The period I have been managing director for the Brooklyn Mark Strand has been prolific in bringing me a pretty dependable gauge of my patrons' picture needs. Thus my features present very little difficulty in selection. In the face of this, however, the selection is not wholly guided by any set of principles or occult formulae. My principles and formulae vary, as even does public taste. In pulsing my audience I can shift my views and principles like a gun on a turret, and train them on any new visions they may have formed, in complete co-ordination with the adaption.

The struggle for survivance in commercial realms is more relentless and of greater constancy than that in fields of physical combat. And as on the ground of strife, so in the commercial realm, those carry away victory, whose battery is strongest. The more batteries you command, the greater the effectiveness of your assault upon public interest and public attention.

Therefore, isn't it logical that if news reels, scenes, condensed plays, novelties, travelogues, ballets and masques provide variegated entertainment and proffer high powered armaments for patronage-tussles, they be advertised, programmed and featured in proportion to the feature picture? Does not the feature sometimes fail to score? And in this event is it not advisable to have something in readiness to be thrown into the entertainment breach? If the feature does score and the short subjects please—then that is a knock-out! On the other hand if it fails, the short subject program will support the falling feature!

This has become a sort of creed with me, upon which I have been working during my entire exhibitorial career. It has also been the inspiration of my programs. As far as my audiences were concerned, times too numerous to mention have so-called super-specials devolved into mere "shooting gallery" material. What bolstered up the weak headliner and side-tracked an epidemic of clientele-dissatisfaction was the supplementary program, the short subjects which, chosen with this possibility in view, had a culminating entertainment value as great as the feature.

My program building is then set in locomotion with the consideration of short subjects. I use the term short subjects in its most comprehensive theatrical meaning. Perhaps there is nothing in the entertainment world so much in demand as the news reel. The editing of the Brooklyn Mark Strand's weekly news reel I have not delegated to any one subservient. I edit the reel selecting my subjects from three sources. I found the news reel entertainments to be augmented one hundred per cent by synchronizing the action of it with the playing of the orchestra. News reels run off inharmoniously with the theme the orchestra is playing are hardly above the level of news-pictures seen in the newspapers daily. Give them an accompaniment of proper music, it matters little whether it is supplied by organ, orchestra or piano, and they will become imbued with all the intimacy and warmth of life.

Public spirit is a power, just as real and no more mysterious than electricity, steam or any other great force of nature. It may be harnessed and guided in the same way these forces are controlled.

Just as electric dynamos must be kept running to provide continuous current, so must novelties be continuously on tap, if the ticket roll is to continue to circulate.

Why Variety in Programs Is Essential

By Mack Sennett
Producer of Sennett Comedies

WHAT comprises the ideal program, aside from the feature production?
The reply to that question will be as variable as there are short program subjects.
It will vary, too, in different communities or localities. What may be interesting to the patrons of a Los Angeles neighborhood house might not please those who attend a motion picture show in Yonkers.
I have my own ideas and preferences, naturally. First of all, I believe in variety. Second, being a producer of comedies, I feel that no program is complete unless it contains a two-reel comedy. Then there should be a good musical program—for who is there that does not love and appreciate good music?—a news reel, and an educational or travel subject.
Above all, there should be contrast in all programs. I believe the subjects should be so alternated that the same emotion will not be appealed to at any two successive times. By that I mean, a comedy should not follow a comedy, a news reel should not follow an educational feature, a light, airy overture should not follow a comedy or a deep, heavy, emotional selection follow a drama.
It has been my observation that short, scenic picture appeal to lovers of nature and the beautiful, provided they are well done, of course. Travel pictures. I feel, appeal to most everyone, for who is there who has not the desire to hie away to some remote land—become a wanderer on the face of the globe? It is an innate desire in every man, and most women, and the sadness of it is that they cannot accede to the demand that tells them “go.” Their enjoyment therefore comes through seeing these foreign lands and customs flashed across the silversheet before them.
The news reels are ideal program subjects, but the items that compose them should be selected with more care than is now being exercised. The public is become surfeited with scenes of parades, reviews, winter sports, and like subjects. What I personally believe the public desires are more scenes of unusual people, events, places and things. There are countless of these that have never been photographed.
In the matter of program comedies, I have always striven to attain the highest degree of excellence, and the success of Sennett comedies is proof sufficient that I have not failed. And too, their success proves the efficacy of the two-reel comedy as an ideal program feature.
Educational reels are exceptionally good, in my opinion, for they have the effect of visual instruction, than which, according to renowned educators, there is no better.
In general, however, if plenty variety be incorporated into a program a majority of the people will be satisfied. That’s my opinion, at any rate.

Short Reels Through A Minister’s Eyes

By Reverend E. B. Russell
Director of Distribution, Geographic Film Co.

The opportunity of the motion picture theaters at the present time for public service is without a doubt the greatest than any industry in the country has ever had and the element that makes this opportunity so predominant is the fact that in the showing of motion pictures they are utilizing the greatest force known today to modern science, in the shaping and making of human character. The exhibitor holds a tremendous power over this industry, for the simple reason that in the last analysis he determines what shall or shall not be exhibited on his screen and if he so desires he can either prostitute or he can make the most of this wonderful opportunity.
The class of film today that contains the strongest elements in the building up process of this great industry to the writer’s mind, is the short reel subject, and if the exhibitor will make a careful analysis of his theater audiences he will find that they carry away with them more of the influences of the short reel subject than they do of the long feature subjects. This reason is perfectly obvious from the fact that the human mind works, not in a peculiar way in its reaction toward the treatment of any given subject, but that it always works in one way and is only able to take in a certain amount of information at a time and where the information has been padded, as many feature subjects are with extraneous matter, trivialities, etc., it will be found that about all that is of a real informational character could have been contained in one reel.
The novelty of the motion picture is now gone and the public is asking that this great medium be utilized for a more noble and higher purpose than mere entertainment.
Photoplays and Music
By Fred Miller
Managing Director, California Theater, Los Angeles

AFTER a full year of following the policy of unusual photoplays and unusual music, I have come to the conclusion that here in Los Angeles that is what the discriminating picture hunters really want. When I opened the California about four years ago I followed the established custom of giving a diversified program including special stage numbers, prologues, a chorus of thirty-five or forty voices and maintained an orchestra of about thirty pieces under a capable director. I had the best talent I could find in the matter of artists and presentation directors and business was good.

But with the coming in of the combination vaudeville and picture houses I found it more and more difficult to secure talent of a high enough character to satisfy my clientele and it was then that it dawned upon me that possibly I was trying to please too many varied tastes. If a person wanted vaudeville there were a couple of high class vaudeville houses here and if he wanted popular priced vaudeville and an ordinary photoplay as a chaser there were numbers of that type of houses newly opened. Then is when I decided that there was an even larger number of amusement hunters who desired exceptional pictures and exceptional music. I engaged Carli D. Elinor, a nationally known orchestra leader and the most famous synchronizer of music to pictures in the country, as my director and told him to go out and gather together an orchestra of not less than fifty artists and we would inaugurate a three-a-day-concert program of from twenty-five to thirty minutes and make that a feature of our programs and cut out all presentations and prologues. He went to work and in a short time had secured a splendid organization that has made the California theater the most talked of house in this section in regard to music.

I don't want it thought that there has been or will be any neglect of the short subjects and novelty reels. It has always been our aim to keep abreast of the times and we hold contracts for many excellent short subjects including International, Fox, and a local news reel. We also have been a steady buyer of the beautiful Prizma scenics and the Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales. Many other novelties including Aesop's Fables, Goldwyn Graphics, Screen Snapshots, etc. find a place on our programs and they are all carefully chosen and are a great help in rounding out a program that will appeal to all tastes. This is true as well in regard to one and two reel comedies, and Christie's specials have been welcome when we had the twenty-two or three minutes necessary to run them.

Patronage Building
By Fred E. Baer
Publicity Manager, Kineto Company of America

THE especial value of short subjects to exhibitors is in the uniformity of excellence that can be obtained.

Short subjects have to do mostly with realism; they deal in travel, science, history, the arts and all the many subjects of life that have to do with facts and not with fiction. Every one of them can be made high-grade. It is a question of ability and workmanship and these qualities can be obtained in the planning, the camera work, the editing, the developing and printing—always provided that the man at the head has the vision to gather the right kind of men around him.

The regularity of fine short subjects insures to a theater a definite patronage that will not be affected by the various values of feature productions. They form a staple, very much like his music. The right kind of short subjects can be depended upon to draw a certain number of patrons week in, week out, regardless of what feature subjects are played.

When Charles Urban first started to release his Urban Popular Classics in the United States there were many critics who said that while they would interest some first-run theaters, the pictures were too "high-brow" to make a general appeal.

Now, Mr. Urban has an absolute conviction that no picture can be too good for any audience; that the general understanding of the audience always rises to the tone of the picture and that the better it is, the better the reception it gets. By that he does not mean it can afford to be boresome. He does not consider any picture as having real educational value unless it is as entertaining as it is instructive. How correctly he has judged the temper of theater patrons is indicated by recent comments in trade journals by exhibitors.

In the Autumn the Kineto Company intends to publish a new series of Urban Popular Classics, releasing one new additional subject every week. The same high standard of the Movie Chats will characterize this new series, but the form and structure and method of treatment will be altogether different, so that the theaters now playing Movie Chats will find the new series a welcome addition to their program.

Mr. Urban, in addition to his tremendous collection of negatives, gathered by himself and his agents over a long period of years, is constantly getting new material. The new series that will be released beginning this Autumn will consist of 52 subjects and these are being selected from 350 reels that he has edited from his library of negatives. Thus, it is apparent, what a wide variety is possible from such a large selection. This library is being developed on a scale to furnish, in time, a picture for every theater every day.

Paul Parrott—One reel.

“His Rascals”—Two reel “kid and animal” comedies.
HAROLD LLOYD—Two reel comedies. Also one reel (Re-issue).

READ THESE NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS

“Down and Out”—“Snub” Pollard is the chief fun provoker in this latest Hal Roach comedy. It is full of laughs and clever comedy business.

“Friday the 13th”—Hal Roach has given us a new—and welcome—comedian in Paul Parrott. The newcomer has a big bag of new tricks, and this picture is so funny it will please any audience in the world.

“Our Gang”—This new feature, a children and animal comedy, was given a studio preview for the benefit of the Los Angeles critics. In the opinion of the writer the new series will be a knockout. Like all Hal Roach productions the fun is along clean lines without the slightest tinge of the offensive.

“Pistols for Breakfast”—This Harold Lloyd re-issue got as many laughs as it did when first released.

Produced under the personal supervision of Hal Roach himself. No wonder they are good.

THE LEE KIDS

Jane and Katherine Lee Comedies

THE "Two Baby Grands" are back in a series of two-reel comedies that will endear them more than ever in the hearts of their followers. "A PAIR OF ACES" and "KIDS AND SKIDS" are the first two of their laughable comedies.
A SERIES OF 52 SINGLE REELS EMBELLISHED IN PRIZMA COLOR PHOTOGRAPHY. A COMPLETE HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF PALESTINE.

The one reel you need to balance and complete a high class program.

Ninety percent of the people of your city are directly interested in this subject. Make new fans of them by using this series of allegorical Bible stories, bringing a real and new novelty in motion picture production.

What the Critics Say—

"... a little gem of a film."—R. W. Baremore in The Morning Telegraph.

"... glamorous and mystic scenes of the Holy Land ... without allegory or the aid of human figures."—Allison Smith in The New York Globe.

"... starts a new era in Biblical pictures suitable for exhibition in the theatres."—Arthur James in The Moving Picture World.

"... a beautiful and impressive picture ... a far more powerful influence for good, we believe, than any Easter sermon that was ever preached."—Harriette Underhill in The New York Tribune.

"... In every respect a most impressive picture ... splendidly photographed."—George Blaisdell in The Exhibitors Trade Review.

The Story of the Man Who Went Fishing

THIS is the story of the man who went trout fishing. He took his stand at a good point along the bank of the stream and watched and waited. Of a sudden there was a flap and a splash in mid-stream. Knowing that the only fair-sized fish in this water were trout, the fisherman cast his fly to the spot. He pulled his line in at once. But it was not a trout he had caught. A little useless chub was wriggling on the hook. He tossed it off and cast out again. This time he pulled in a copious quantity of river bottom. Again he hurled out his line. He collected an old-water-soaked shoe this time. Then he pulled in a bullhead. Then a little shiner.

BUT FINALLY HE GOT THE TROUT THAT HE WANTED. However—before he got it, he had to take many other poor fish that he had no use for.

YOU, too, go fishing every day. You try to catch the whale of a picture that made the big splash in the motion picture sea. But in order to hook up this big one, you have to take many other small fry. You don't get sunburnt where you go fishing. You sit in your office or visit a film exchange. How many times have you angled for that BIG PICTURE—and got it, but you also had to take other smaller, mediocre attractions. Suppose we should tell you of a stream where there are only BIG fish—no bullheads or chubs or small fry to eat up your bait? Wouldn't you fish there?

WHEN you angle for Goldwyn Pictures next season, you will find that there are only BIG ONES to be had. And therefore you will have to take any little ones to get these Big Ones. Goldwyn will make only Twenty pictures for 1922-23. Only Twenty! But each of these will be a Great Big Smashing Super-special. You have been watching the news! You know the directors Goldwyn has lined up to make these twenty specials.

THE men behind these pictures are Great Men in the motion picture industry, and they will make pictures greater than those which made their names so great. Not only on the basis of their past successes, but because they are now backed by the greatest resources of their careers, and because they now have stories which you as a showman would be willing to book into your theatres on the weight of their titles and possibilities alone.

MARSHALL NEILAN will have powerful stories, unlimited resources and free reign to make motion picture history during the coming year. He will produce all his pictures for Goldwyn on a scale surpassing anything he has ever done in his successful motion picture career. Maurice Tourneur is back from London directing a great picturization of Hall Caine's world-famous novel and play, "The Christian." Allen Holubar is already filming "Broken Chains," the $10,000 prize-winning story and one of the greatest narratives that has ever been written directly for the screen. It was selected from 30,000 manuscripts submitted to the Chicago Daily News. R. A. Walsh has begun production on "Passions of the Sea," a smashing story, and this famous director's first big picture at the Goldwyn studios. Rupert Hughes has not only made all of his widely famous fiction masterpieces available for Goldwyn production, but he will now personally direct each one of them. E. Mason Hopper has finished "Hungry Hearts," from the novel by Anzia Yezierska, a photodrama that is going to be the BIG PICTURE of next season, and he will start soon on another splendid story rich in human interest and heart appeal.

Moral: Don't fish for BIG FISH in a stream where there are also small ones, if you can fish in a pond where there are only big ones.

Why Pay License Fees for the Privilege of Playing Copyrighted Music??

Because—I need music in my theatre, lots of it, and new music too. I need popular music, the kind they are whistling and humming, the sort they are dancing to. I doubt if people would come to see my pictures at all if it weren’t for the music, and without the musical accompaniment they certainly wouldn’t pay an admission to see pictures alone. The time when they would was in days long gone by.

Because—I realize that this music is an essential part of the service I deliver to my patrons, it helps me make profits, or makes my chance of getting them much better. I am willing to encourage authors and composers, just as I am scenario writers—I only hope that both will create constantly better stuff.

Because—The price that is charged me for a license permitting the use of an enormous repertoire of the most popular music is entirely reasonable; it has not been pyramided along with other rising costs, but has remained at a fixed figure for years.

Because—If authors, composers and publishers are to take the risk and make the investment incidental to creating new music for my use, and then making it popular so my patrons will enjoy it when rendered, I am glad to share my very reasonable part of that burden, and I want these men, who contribute to the welfare of my enterprise, to prosper and succeed.

Because—The law says they are entitled to these fees; I am now and I hope always to be, a law-abiding and law-respecting citizen, and any business that I run is going to run according to law.

Because—I know that in the larger sense it is the part of wisdom and foresight to contribute reasonably to the encouragement and development of musical entertainment, and this can best be done by a practical reward to those who create it.

And There Are Lots of Other Reasons

There are hundreds of thousands of compositions that may be played entirely free of any restrictions, but the ones for which there is a public demand, the tunes which the people are whistling, singing, and dancing to, are in a large measure included in the repertoire of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Don’t you want your orchestra to play these tunes—or would you prefer it to be a “plugging” medium for unknown works? The question will answer itself at the box office, if you give it a chance.

Feed the Goose

By Charles C. Burr Producer, “Torchy” Comedies

NEVER before in the history of the picture business has there been such a need for good short subjects.

The standard of the feature pictures has sunk in entertainment value to almost an unbelievable degree. The big first-run theaters are scrambling for features that bear the smallest semblance of attraction.

The short subjects are coming into their own—Harold Lloyd, Buster Keaton, Larry Senon, and Johnny Hines are frequently billed on the front of the marquees of the leading theaters. No longer is the comedy a filler. Today it is an attraction and exhibitors must appreciate this and be willing to pay the price for the comedies on an attraction basis. If they don’t, they are going to lose their two-reelers.

Harold Lloyd is going to five-reelers—why we don’t know. Of the two other comedians mentioned, their style of work doesn’t lend themselves to feature productions, but in the case of Johnny Hines he has gone into five-reelers for good, for reasons we can talk about. We find we can make five-reelers much easier and simpler at very little more cost than two-reelers.

There is more fun working out a big story and more pleasure in making it, to say nothing of the monetary returns, which are so much greater. It is very difficult to think of funny situations, and how much more difficult it is to think of the kind that get laughs in two-reelers than in five-reelers.

In a two-reel picture, there is little or no opportunity to plant a laugh, to characterize the people, and then explain the coming situation. In a five-reel picture, you can do all this, and very frequently in a two-reel picture what should be a very funny situation falls flat before an audience, for there has not been sufficient footage to get the idea over properly.

Our experience in making two-reel comedies, and a brand that has had a certain degree of success, is that it is a heart-breaking, back-breaking, thankless task. At the finish of a two-year trial of this kind of production, we found ourselves with all our capital still invested and over $25,000 on the wrong side of the balance sheet in addition. True, we have gotten a little of this back out of the percentage interest we retain in the distributing rights and at the end of another year we will probably be out of the woods. It is conceivable that we can make 10% profit if the exhibitors and the distributor cooperate, and the former backs the distributor up sufficiently.

This is no compensation at all for the “grief” that anyone has to put up with in making this type of picture. There are very few producers or organizations able to make comedies, and very few have ever turned out a successful series, regardless of the fact that there have been probably more two-reel comedies made than any other kind of film, and there are more so-called two-reel comedies on the shelves now than any other kind of pictures.
Some Short Reels

"Take Next Car"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production..........................1 reel comedy

Paul Parrott and J ohnna Ralston are the prime movers of this amusing single reel. The comedian is a horse car driver who is loyal to his company, and the daughter of the president. The jitney service run the car a heavy competition and make as much trouble as they can. As the car is seldom on time the franchise is greatly endangered until the driver gets the idea of putting the horse inside and pulling the car with the aid of a motorcycle. They race back to the city and arrive just in time to save the franchise. Some clever comedy business and funny gags are sprinkled throughout the reel making the production amusing and entertaining. "Take Next Car" will please almost any audience.

"Screen Snapshots" No. 6—Pathe
Type of production..........................1 reel fan magazine

Ruth Roland shows how easily she can change her facial expression in this informal number of "Screen Snapshots." The cameraman took advantage of the opportunity and shot Ruth in slow motion, so that everybody may see how it is done. Edgar Rice Burroughs, author of "Tarzan," shows you how easily he writes his stories on the typewriter while his children bang over his shoulder and make useful comments. At a Legion benefit a great number of film stars are assembled and are shown in close-up. Others in this number of the fan magazine are Blanche Sweet and her husband Marshall Neilan, William Farnum, and Larry Senon. The number is well up to the standard of the series and will please picture fans.

"The Bride-To-Be"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production..........................1 reel comedy

Paul Parrott is the chief fun maker in this latest Hal Roach comedy. Paul is about to be married but loses his clothes. Starting out in his B. V. Ds., he walks behind a hiker and gets the necessary clothes from the knapsack. He even shaves as he walks behind the man with the knapsack. Unfortunately the hiker turns out to be an old friend of the bride and a chase follows when he discovers that his dress suit is being worn by the groom. The gags are mildly funny and the comedy business only average. The production as a whole is not up to the Hal Roach standard and will make but an average comedy filler.

"Daring Dangers"—Universal
Type of production..........................2 reel western

Tom Santschi is the hero of this two reeler which uses the familiar dream trick. The story is told in the regular way, but in the end you discover that it is only a dream. The story is told of a man convicted of murder. The foreman of the neighboring ranch pays a good deal of attention to the convicted man's wife. The prisoner manages to escape and return home where he shoots the foreman and throws his body in a closet. The sheriff arrives and discovers the murder. The convict's wife is wounded as they attempt to escape, and at this point you learn that it is all a bad dream of the prisoner. The warden then comes into the cell and announces that the convicted man has been found innocent and therefore pardoned. The story contains some fairly good action but is far from convincing and will hardly satisfy the average western fan. The type of story that ends by saying that it is all a bad dream has long passed out of favor because it leads the public to believe that the dream is a reality and arrests their attention under false pretences. When you find out it is all a dream and you were not taken into the confidence of the players then you are very apt to be more disappointed than amused.

"The Song of the Lark"—Pathe
Type of production..........................2 reel drama

"The Song of the Lark," is a little two-reel drama with foreign settings, directed by Arthur Maude and J. C. Haydon. The story, which was written by Arthur Maude, deals with the eternal triangle. Two men love the same girl. One is strong and rich, and the other is a hopeless dreamer. The rich wins the girl because he proves his courage by saving her caged bird from fire. Doris Coram makes a very charming girl, but the story allows her little room for acting, and the situations appear stiff and unreal. There is very little action in the production and no characterization. The struggle between the two men is told mainly in the titles. The photography, however, is good and some picturesque effects have been obtained. The drama is made along foreign standards and will have little appeal for the average American audience.

Pathe Review No. 168
Type of production..........................1 reel magazine

A special feature of this number of Pathe Review is the shots showing the development of the egg. Some of these shots were taken through a microscopic camera. You are shown the circulation of the blood in the unborn chick and its gradual growth. The final scenes showing the chick breaking through the shell are well photographed and will please any audience. A dog, cat, and parrot form a domestic animal section while the travel subject this time is devoted to views of the Ashokan Reservoir in Alaska. The colored section takes you on a personally conducted tour to Jibuti. The review is varied in subject matter and well up to the high standard set by this series.

"The Fable of the Mischievous Cat"—Aesop's Fables—Pathe
Type of production..........................1 reel cartoon

"Satan finds mischief for idle hands," is the moral of this number of Aesop's Fables. The story deals with an idle cat who manages to fool the police officer. In one scene the cat plays the role of a Spanish bull fighter. But the bull is a friend and they do a lot of stalling until the public protest and demand blood. A good many laughs are contained in this number of the Fables. The animation is clever and up to Paul Terry's high standard. The number will hold the attention and make a good hot weather program filler.

"The Fable of the Boastful Cat"—Aesop's Fables—Pathe
Type of production..........................1 reel cartoon

It is never wise to be too boastful—is the moral of this number of Aesop's Fables. "I can lick anyone in the world," says the hero of this little cartoon. He gets on pretty well, but in the end meets his Waterloo. Some of the fight scenes are very funny and will bring several laughs from the average audience. The cartoon is up to the average of the series and contains some clever bits of animation. Will do well as a program filler and amuse almost any audience.
Short Reels

“The Dog and the Fish”—Aesop’s Fables—Pathe
Type of production......................................1 reel animated cartoon

The little dog in this number of Aesop’s Fables goes fishing. He throws out his bait when he sees a big fish coming along but he only catches a little one. He throws back the little fish into the water and falls asleep. His dream is quite funny. The grateful little fish comes back and saves him from a difficult situation. When the little dog wakes up he finds plenty of fish playing with his pole and line. The moral brought out by this number of Aesop’s Fables is—“He who dreams catches no fish.” The animation runs along quite smoothly but the situations and subject matter are not up to the best in this series. The fact that the little dog would have caught plenty of fish if he had not fallen asleep hardly leads to the above axiom.

“Touch All Bases”—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production......................................1 reel comedy

Paul Parrott is the chief comedian in this fairly amusing Hal Roach comedy, dealing with a base-ball game. Paul takes his girl to see the game but encounters some difficulty at the gate and is forced to remain outside. Many of the gags occur when Paul tries to get a view of the game through the fence. Then he finds a rain check and decides to give the bleachers a little rain with the aid of a hose. This gets him into the field but not for long. At length he is brought into the game as a pinch-hitter and manages to make a home run; but he runs around the wrong way. The gags are not over original but will bring more than one good laugh when shown. Paul Parrott is supported by Eddie Baker and Jobyna Ralston. Little time is lost between gags and a good deal of the action is fairly amusing.

The two-reel sensation of the past season. The fourth subject of the Triart Group, "Hope," with beautiful Mary Astor in her greatest role, has just finished its pre-release showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York, as a featured picture in Manager Rothafel's famous Short Subject Week.

"Snooky," the world-famous chimpanzee, in a new series of six side-splitting two-reelers. This frolicsome "humanzee" gets more fun out of life than most humans.

Charles Urban's engrossing single-reel screen organ of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. One of the fastest-selling single reelers in the field. Released weekly.

A screen dramatization of the most interesting characters in American literature. Twelve one-reel subjects ready for spot bookings. Box-office tested and hailed country-wide as solid entertainment.

Two series (13 each) of one-reel Bray Specialties, released every two weeks. Unquestionably the best novelties open for program-building. At last, something ABSOLUTELY NEW in screen entertainment.

The fun of the world compiled by the greatest weekly journal in its class. This is the ONLY film of its kind sponsored by the LITERARY DIGEST, and is backed by the biggest advertising campaign in screen history.

Action in every field where the crack of the gun or the swish of fast-running tackle mean that thrill known only to the keen sportsman. Issued under the direction of one of America's greatest sporting magazines.
Lonesome

WAITING AWILE

That’s what the new American organizations. Do over here. Because of block booking. And other conditions. But they wait patiently. They get in the habit. Because what between holidays and the general methods of doing things over in England. No one bothers about things. If you don’t believe it ask Harry Reichenbach. Or George Kann. Who gets back early in August. They will tell you the story. Over here you catch a man on business chiefly on Wednesdays. Because on Thursdays he leaves for his week end trip. And gets back on Tuesdays.

BIG HOUSE GOING UP

American producers will be glad. To hear that a big house—2500 seats—will be started. In the Strand. In the heart of downtown London. Within a few weeks. Well known theatrical magnate back of proposition. Great chance for a live American manager. But heaven only knows. What he would do to get them going.

For this is a word to mouth country. The newspapers won’t “fall.” For what is known as American publicity. And if it’s a good show. The crowd has to tell one another. Otherwise it’s dead.

AMERICAN CAPITAL IN GERMANY

For a big house. In Cologne. Which is the gateway to Germany. Understand a great site has been procured. Right opposite the wonderful old Cathedral. And a 2,500 seat house.

Will be erected as part of a gigantic hotel property. There isn’t a big house in Cologne. And this one promises to be a real baby doll. Up in less than a year. The backers are already dickering. For American product. Understand Fox has been working on it. But didn’t get very far. Up to this time.

Putting It Over
There is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. See along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleanup.

 Stratford, Ont.—"The Man From Home" was found to be a satisfactory title for a-operative show. And adverting when the Altman played it recently, Leon J. Bamberger, Paramount exploiter of Toronto tied up used as "atmosphere" only with the title used as a caption. A typical one read: "The Man From Home" would appreciate a radio installed when he returns. Complete radio sets in stock." The same theme was used successfully on other commodities.

Ocean Park, Cal.—In this resort, many thousands who walk the big catalogue sidewalks of and Santa Monica were attracted by a mannhed head of Tommy Meighan which was painted on the marquee of the Rosemary, with the Paramount picture, "The Bachelor Daddy." During the opening match a large board was erected and while the crowd was watching the artist began blocking out Meighan's features. It was simple and it took only six hours to do it, but by the end of the four hours enough people were drawn into the house to set a record.
The house artist did the work.

Reading, Pa.—At the Arcadia, Manager Hendricks tried a stunt used in Newark recently. He was playing "Molly-O" and arranged for the use of a window in which he placed several turtles, each with a letter of the title on its back. A pass was offered to any who saw them spell the title of the film simply and on this occasion, the turtles lined up in the proper formation several times.
Of course, there was a fair-sized cheer but attention was focused on the presentation and it repaid the exhibitor. This stunt is an exceptionally good one in addition it has the merit of being inexpensive as well as very easily adaptable.

A street stunt on "The Prisoner of Zenda," arranged by Terry Turner of the Loew's office, included a parade of 28 men in gaudy uniforms on Broadway. The men were selected from "extras" who work quite steadily in pictures and the proper signs of any advertising in connection with the stunt were the gold letters
"ZENDA" on the red sash from the shoulder to the waist. The financial district, subways, buses, Harlem, Bronx, all the beaches and parks were invaded by the uniformed men and crowds followed wherever they appeared.

One afternoon they paraded Broadway, defacing, making a exercise. A teaser ad campaign ran in the dailies during the week of this stunt.
The opening night the men were taken over to the Astor theater, where moving pictures were made of the first nights.

Goldwyn-First National Deal Off;
Former to Maintain Own Exchanges

Brief Statement Attributes Failure to Close Contract Because “Difficulties Involved Are So Many”—Guarantees One Big Stumbling Block

There will be no merger between Goldwyn and Associated First National. The negotiations of long standing have been definitely terminated and the two companies involved will continue their individual identities as at present.

About 5:45 o'clock last night the following statement was issued by Associated First National and verified at Goldwyn:

"After a thorough consideration of the contemplated contract between Associated First National Pictures, Inc. and Goldwyn Pictures, Inc., both companies have reached the opinion that the difficulties involved in a contract of this magnitude are so many that it is better at this time not to conclude the deal."

It is understood that Goldwyn will continue its present distributing organization and function, as in the past, as both a producing and distributing body. The company as frequently announced to the trade will release 20 pictures. Of that number eight are finished and two, about half finished.

The First National announcement will probably come as a surprise to a great many. The details of the deal were decided upon some time ago and for many weeks past, the matter has been in the hands of attorneys for both sides. About ten days ago it was apparently only necessary to secure the signatures of the necessary parties to make the merger a fact. The consummation of the deal would have brought about what would have undoubtedly proved the most important consolidation in the history of the business.

The advantages to both sides were many. For one thing, for Goldwyn pictures the merger would have meant a saving of about $600,000 a year in distributing costs and perhaps, a more widespread distribution of its products. For First National there would have been according to advance information a guaranteed supply of good box office attractions.

At various times it has been reported that the unexpected obstacles had cropped up. One report indicated that the Goldwyn interest in the Ascher theater holdings intervened and another, that the financial say of Alfred Weiss in the New York State exchange blocked the negotiations.

What is said to have figured largely in the final sessions was the ques-

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. See along your ideas. Let others fellow know how you cleaned up.

Ottumwa, la.—The high spot of every party of our kid was the moment they cut the cake and it was carefully broken to find the dime baked in. The Strand provided a like thrill for more than a thousand citizens when it tied up with a local bakery to bake a free admission ticket with every loaf of bread. A couple of days before it was pulled the bakeries put cards in every kitchen announcing the stunt. The wagon boys made a house-to-house canvass including both patrons and persons they wanted to rope in. The next day the stuffed loaves were delivered. None of the lucky matter was put through the mails and as the purchasers of the bread got their full money's worth they threw the tickets or not. The stunt did not come under the lottery regulations.

Memphis, Tenn.—In the general impression that catch lines are only for newspaper advertising copy or teasers, there is a tendency to overlook their value for lobby displays or theater fronts. Perhaps it is the one time popular ballyhoo coming back again with the swinging cycle; but the management of the Majestic demonstrated to the value of catch lines for arousing interest when they placed over the theater front during the recent engagement of "A Woman's Side." The theater front was literally "covered" with posters and cards on the attraction. Above the theater front ran a 40 foot streamer banner which illustrated by words and drawings the tensest situations in the picture. A hand grasping at the telephone had the caption: "A crazy man held the telephone. Against his voice came through. "Is that story?" "Again the girl's voice said: "No." On the other end of the banner was the pointed revolver with the catch line: "A desperate girl stood behind the gun. A quivering pause. Then a shot." The suggestion of suspense drew in many fans who would not have passed by an ordinary lobby display.

Jonia, Mich.—When the manager of the Regent wanted to bring all the freckled faced boys in town to his house for an exploitation stunt on "Piracy," he advertised for them but got only three. Three never made a parade and the situation looked desperate. Faced by this crisis he called a meeting of all the boy scouts—and it was true. There were only three freckled faced kids in the crowd! So he offered an award calling it a booby prize, for the youngster who hadn't a trace of a freckle on his face. After that the judges had their work cut out and there were enough relatives of candidates for the prize in the theater to make the stunt a paying proposition.

Big Deal Off

tion of guarantees. It is reported that Goldwyn objected when First National refused to guarantee the distribution of any one picture if it did not approve of it after production.

Goldwyn Stock Active

Goldwyn was actively traded in on the curb yesterday. Eighty-seven hundred shares changed hands with the closing at $3.90.

In its review of the primal photoplay productions of the first six months of the current year, the New York Times, as a rule,绮 most of the powerful city authorities of the country, as this to say of two HODKINSON releases:

"JANE EYRE—This Hugo B. Goldwyn production has the flavor of an old novel, which means that it has been sincerely and intelligently done.""THE YOUNG PAINTER

As a motion picture using its own sake, the best of the art productions, based on well-known paintings, Herbert Blach and Lejaren a Hill are the rectors, Mary Astor and Paul Corden the principal players. Simply and expressively staged and photographed.

In its introductory remarks the Times says of its list of pictures that they are nominated "not for the hall of fame, but for exhibition before reasons intelligently and normally interested people seeking screen entertainments."

After all what more could one expect of any photoplay, if it is to entertain?

“Blood and Sand”—F. P.L.
Rivoli

TIMES—With a seemingly authentic Spanish background, a cast of people, who both look and act like cowards, capable of joining his picture with veracity, “Blood and Sand” should be entertaining. First credit, perhaps, should go to the director, Fred Niblo. In individual scenes, and in the whole, Niblo has made this Belasco Irving story real on the screen. Niblo, or, if you prefer, in a number of its most important episodes, is dependably good. It is one of the best pictures of the season, and one which, through its very nature, is distinctly unSpanish as Hollywood presentation is concerned.

N.Y. WORLD—* * * Will prove more satisfying to those persons who have not read Irving’s novel or seen Otto Sennet’s picture, this is so satisfyingly a matter. It is the pinnacle of the Spanish conventions of the screen, and incidentally of all the impressionable flappers to the world.

EVE. TELEGRAM—Rodolph Valentino is the idol of America. The crowds which were present on the opening night were bolder and more enthusiast as rushing to see their hero kill his bull in the ring at Santa Monica, they were made to feel that they were as the crowds which elbowed us yesterday in their efforts to best our rooster.

A. M. * * * For one hour and a half they sat spellbound applauding Valentino.

MORNING TELEGRAM—* * * The greatest picture ever made. * * * Never before has there been a more thrilling film. They are the kind that one wants to see again, so much its greatness hinges upon the performances of its leading men. * * * It is a fact that Mr. Valentino has made a rapid rise to stardom and popularity. One must see this picture to be able to judge the work of the young Italian star.

EVE. MAIL—The brilliance of the film’s execution, the splendid presentation of the highly wrought atmosphere of the bull ring, and the excellent portrayal of a phase of Spanish life almost unknown in the north of the plot’s central theme. * * * The cast is made up of excellent players and perfect types.

EVE. WORLD—* * * may be correctly enough called a picture. It’s the best thing shown heretofore for months. * * * to one who has not read the book the book never works little to be desired. They have sometimes seduced even the most bitter enemies of this type of picture to the values of individual scenes where conscious conventions were tried at bull fights. More than this we can’t ask.

GLOBE—Vicente Blasco Ibanez wrote “Blood and Sand” and his book has made a disturbing impression of the bull-fight, but the film version has barely escaped the danger of the script. What with the decorative careers of Rodolph Valentino and Adriano Nobile, the sport is made so attractive that it might well disappoint a woman who don’t raise her boy in the bull ring. These three have made the picture the most savage, the most ruthless, and the most attractive film year.

SUN.—* * * The picture itself was an exciting one, first rate acting throughout by all the players, a beautiful cast and a profusion of very beautiful shots. A very good picture, this, and one which is sure to be hit. Valentino acts with assurance, but at the same time with restraint and always a desire to be starred.

EVE. TELEGRAM—Rodolph Valentino has made a most creditable performance in his latest picture, “Blood and Sand,” which has been produced by the Selma interests under the supervision of Fred Niblo, who is, as a matter of fact, the distributor. The whole performance of the star is described by the director, Fred Niblo, as a thrilling story one moment, an appealing story the next.

EVE. JOURNAL—Here is Rodolph Valentino at his best. There is no question that this is the most interesting picture of the season, and it will undoubtedly be among the best pictures of the year.

POST—* * * its staging, acting, and photography are excellent throughout. * * * Exciting episodes follow quickly upon one another; beautiful women of repute, serpentine attractiveness—and win; crowds, bull-fights, human weakness, and folly all crowd closely upon one another.

“Voices of the City”—Goldwyn Capitol

MAIL—* * LeRoy Scott can, as a rule, write rattling good underworld and police stories, but apparently he has followed the footsteps of so many of his brothers and from many different branches and offices. * * * Scott has, for the story, been working from the screen back to the print, and vice versa. As a result “Voices of the City” is a weak picture. * * * W.T.W—The Voices of the City” must have been on a busy wire, for the film of that name does not quite

SUN.—* * It is a good stock in trade movie, looking much like other underworld pictures, for it is labelled differently. Lon Chaney is good, as is LeRoy Scott, who is progressively getting a reputation on the lower stages of the screen. * * * As a background of crooked morals the film is fairly straight shooting.

EVE. TELEGRAM—LeRoy Scott has written a characteristic screen drama. It is a story of San Francisco’s underworld, with a series of well drawn and lifelike characterizations delineated by an unusually capable cast, headed by Lon Chaney.

EVE. JOURNAL—Lon Chaney, in the unexpected role of a political boss of the underworld, is featured. * * * He invests the part with vigourous realism. He is a homicidal, involving a girl, an attempt to frame a college professor, in the deal. The picture is quite a background of crooked morals and fairly straight shooting.

HERALD—* * * The cast of the whole picture is headed by Lon Chaney. * * * displays versatility in another line by combining a dress coat and a polished manner with the occasion of being King of the Barbary Coast.

TRIBUNE—“Voices of the City” is at the Capitol, and one is bound to admit that while those voices talk a great deal they do not say much with the occasion of being King of the Barbary Coast.

AMERICAN—* * * A typical LeRoy Scott story with Lon Chaney as the Duke, in a sufficiently villainous role to please his most ardent admirers. He doesn’t utilize more than a hundred of the thousand faces credited to him, but uses them very effectively.

MORNING TELEGRAM—* * * It is not without its interest in the sort of melodrama it has been done. Here we see it again. In this case, due to some very excellent acting on the part of LeRoy Scott, good direction and unusually fine settings the familiar plot offers fair entertainment. As a matter of fact there are certain audiences that will undoubtedly call it “just grand,” but we don’t think they will be found in Capitola.

POST—* * * A suspicion exists that a decade ago—or even five decades ago—this screen play would have been considered quite good. But time has changed, and we are not much the same, such as the “movies,” and these “voices” are much like a hollowness and lilliput. What is the plot? It’s whole ticket not very clear in the mind of one spectator.

Won’t Name Receiver
Chicago Judge Says There Is No Indication of Insolvency in Ascher Bros. Film
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—Judge Hugo Pam has declined the petition for the appointment of a receiver for the Cosmopolitan Securities Co., and Max Nathan, and Harry Ascher, and has entered an order sustaining the defendants.

In the petition filed by Sigmund David, Eugene A. Katz, owner of a third interest in Cosmopolitan, charged that monies of the corporation had been diverted by Ascher brothers for their financial interests and that the company, as well as the Ascher brothers and their allied interests were in danger of bankruptcy.

“There has been nothing shown to this court which indicates insolvent,” Judge Pam said in denying the petition. “The charges of fraud and insolvent and absence of foundation and should not have been made.”

“I am not going to state those accusations made here, which have led to loose talk. A great deal of gossip often spreads and soon dwells in suspicion and engenders a lack of confidence, which is often harmful and unwarranted.”

Penrhyn Stanlaws has finished cutting and assembling “Pink Gods” and will begin work shortly on “Singed Wings,” featuring Bebe Daniels.

Customs Pass It—British Embassy Originally Protested Its Exhibition Here

The customs authorities have decided to permit "How Kitchener Was Murdered," to be shown in this country. J. Parker Read, Jr., will handle the American distribution for the British producers.

This picture is the one which caused a storm of protest in England when it was shown. The story purports to show that Lord Kitchener's trip to Russia was revealed to the Germans through the machinations of German spy and her influence on the Russian Czar. The picture itself is presented as if it were a sworn statement of fact, but the story is not based on historical fact.

Read stated yesterday that because it was pressured by public opinion, the film will be allowed to show. He added that this is not based on historical fact.

Fooled the Kaiser
A special showing was held yesterday of the Kaiser film which was brought to this country in connection with the former emperor's book which will run serially in The New York Times. The film will be released through Henry Levey and Fred E. Harlin.

Baron von Radovitzky, who brought the films to America explained that permission had been granted to photograph the castle and grounds in which the Kaiser is confined. A specially built camera with a fixed focus, and telescopic lens was used. The operator worked under a black cloth. In one or two places the Kaiser got out of the way of the photographers only to get into range of the disguised camera. At no time did he suspect that he was being taken. His appearance is much changed.

Getting Ready
Goldwyn Plans Extensive Advertising for Each of Its 20 Pictures—Series from Neilan

Goldwyn intends backing with an extensive advertising campaign each of its 20 pictures for release during 1922-1923. Company officials point to the new schedule as an indication of the growing influence of the Goldwyn organization. He will hold a contract with First National for two pictures, both of which "Secrets" and "Kindred of the Dust" have been completed, Maurice Tourneur, originally a member of the Associated Producers, is believed to have recently signed his lot with Goldwyn.

Aiken Holubar, who is making "Broken Chains," according to well-informed circles, has one more to make for First National. His contract was supposedly for two. One, "Hurricane's Cal," is now ready for release.

If one of the reports in circulation yesterday is to be at all credited, a certain official formerly prominent in the Goldwyn distributing machine is slated to return to his old post.

Injunction Dissolved in Detroit
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Detroit—The application of Phil Gleichenon for a permanent injunction to restrain Famous Players from showing pictures by John H. Kunsky for exhibition has been denied. "White Satan Sleeps" goes into one of the Kunsky theaters next week.

The Kunsky interests have withdrawn from the Michigan M. P. T. Circuit, of which George W. Trendle, Kunsky's general manager is a member, passed a resolution calling on Famous Players to live up to its contract with Gleichenon while Trendle was absent from the meeting.

Challenge for Ind'pts

One of the chief topics of discussion yesterday was the official announcement of the dispersal of the Goldwyn First National deal.

One apparent result—and this was intimated excessively yesterday—was concern among the independent producers. It was pointed out that First National had counted on the 20 pictures from which the company's income is derived next year to about 70 productions. Now that the Goldwyn product will continue through that company's own outlets, the challenge to independent producers will have a chance to place their output with First National. The Lord's watch of necessity, have to turn to the open market to round out their schedule.

First National division managers will be in New York next Monday for sales conferences with the home office. At that time, they will be acquainted with the details of the first six months' line-up. Immediately after they have advised their sales forces of what the schedule will be, First National will publicly announce it.

There will be one release a week from the Kunsky interests, beginning the end of this month.

Receiver Is Named (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Cincinnati—Perin W. Scarborou has been named receiver of the Lyric, the action being brought by the Lyric Theater Co. The house will continue to operate. The attorney for the plaintiffs, John C. Hermann, says $74,856 is past due. According to James G. Stewart, attorney, $28,000 of its obligations have been paid off by the present management. Large sums due to the theatre itself and not paid owing to a slump in the theater business, are given as the cause for the present financial status, but arrangements will be made shortly to liquidate the indebtedness, it is claimed.

At Broadway Theaters

Capitol

Music from “Manon” is offered by the orchestra for the overture, after which a Robert Bruce Wildersey’s “Morning Hymn” is played. Alexander Granovsky, and Boris M. Niles dance a “Maria” from the “Cappello’’ ballet, and there is the magazine release. Gene Landis, Mabel Ritch, Josef Turn, and Pierre Hurvitz, respectively soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass, comprising the Metropolitan quartet, sing the familiar “Rigoletto” and then “Voices of the City,” the introduction and entrance of the “Ballerina,” and “Lover’s Symphony” is rendered by the orchestra after that, and then the symphonium. “Tom-Tomville Blues,” a Tom-Tomville comedy by Fontaine Fox. The organist closes as usual.

Cohan

Johnnie Walker is starring in “My Dad,” a new feature here. In addition, the program includes a Starland Revue, a Flatiron comic, “Fog Town,” starring Vaident, featuring Dan Mason; a Hy Mayer Revue, “Rick’s Life in Music,” an overture, conducted by Andrew Prose, and a prologue. Miss Brock and Mr. Fairground, see the site of the sea, and the following is sung, “The Dearlest,” composed by Doré especially for the feature.

Rialto

Gloria Swanson in “Her Dogged” Capone has been moved down from the Rialto with most of the rest of the program shown at the latter house last week. Josef Alvis, trumpet virtuoso, plays “Masque Frivolit” by S. Galdal, which is a new number.

Rivoli

Rodolph Valenstein in “Blood and Sand” occupies the high place in the Rivoli, and a Spanish note is reflected in the rest of the program, the overture being Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakov’s “Capriccio Espanol.” The number just before the feature is “A Night in Spain,” sung by Augusto Or dner, baritone, and the Rialto ensemble. In addition there are the usual picturelets, a ballad offering by Martha Mason and an Earl Hurst comedy, “One Old Car.”

Strand

Selections from “Ninotchka,” starring Mariseta, by Victor Herbert, comprise the overture. George Bourn, singer, will be “I’m Falling in Love With Someone.” One of the greatest American Composer Series, “Orenzelle Worker, Holmes,” follows. Then comes “La voltige,” sung by Hugo Dluhobot, sings “Beverly,” by Guy D’Harde, the top comedy is next and then the vocal prologue to the feature by the National Male Quartette. Tom Tixy in “Jest Tony,” is the principal attraction, and is followed by another Victor Herbert number played by the orchestra. “The Army Ball,” from “Blues in Tideland,” a Fox Sunshine comedy, “Puppy Love,” rounds out the show.

Cohen Plans Trip
Swing Around Country Designed to Clear the Way for Expected Legislation

Sydney S. Cohen will make a swing around the country next month. Of the many things that have been afoot for the Allen assets by Nathan, the final and official offer of $350,000, it is announced, was withdrawn and lower prices were subsequently made.

The reason for this action, as outlined by J. M. Bullen, lawyer for the Players Canadian Corp., that in the intervals between some of the assets, the Allen Theatres, Ltd., had been lost by reason of foreclosure proceedings. The delay in getting approval of the offer, he declared, had been lost by reason of the Allen Corp., that the assets were lost by reason of foreclosure proceedings. Goldwyn’s “The Night Rose” Shown as “Voices of the City”—originally Banned

It was learned yesterday that “Voices of the City” the Goldwyn picture for playing at the Criterion as “The Night Rose” in a reedited form. It will be recalled that “The Night Rose” is the picture which fell under the ban of the X-rated on the part of the Commission last year on the ground that it was immoral. Later, Goldwyn took the matter before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court where the Commission was upheld in its decision against Goldwyn. The company in its brief at the time stated that the picture cost $200,000 and that the loss of revenue in New York State was $40,000. It was ascertained yesterday that (Continued on Page 4)

Why Our Rates Are Low

Our rates for motion picture positives are low because:

1. Our up-to-date equipment, including the scientifically correct Tube System enables us to turn out 3,000,000 feet of prints per week.
2. The prints are so near perfect that little or no replacements are necessary.
3. Our staff consists of experts who have had life-long training in laboratory work.

Not only are our rates the lowest, but the insurance rate on negatives stored at our plant is only 43.8 cents.

New York City Amid—thunder,

On one of the hottest days since 1883—
The record of the RIVOLI was smashed to pieces!

On August 7th New York’s millions sweltered in the heat of one of the most oppressive days in years. The official temperature was 81, the average for 33 years was 73. And at two o’clock a terrific hail storm broke out, continuing all afternoon.

But undaunted by the heat, the rain and hail, thousands stood in front of the Rivoli all day long, waiting to buy tickets for “Blood and Sand.”

The paid attendance for Monday was 8,587.
The biggest Monday in history hitherto—and this was in the winter—was 7,977.

There is a record if !
there ever was one!

It means that “Blood and Sand” is the biggest box-office attraction ever released. It means that the critics were right when they said:—

“The greatest picture ever made.”
N. Y. Telegraph.

“One of life’s great moments.”
N. Y. Herald.

“Makes Valentino the idol of America. Crowds cried ‘Brava.’” N. Y. Tribune.

“The most exciting and colorful

N. Y. Globe.

abundant to print.

In the Courts
An answer has been filed in the Supreme Court by Malcolm D. Gibson of the Mozart, at Elmira, to a suit by the United Artists Corp. for breach of contract over “Way Down East.” Gibson, who also asks that the case be transferred from New York County to Chemung County Circuit, alleges that the film sent him was so broken and defective that it was totally unfit for use, that the attorneys of Elmira learned of it, and only a third of the number he expected to view the film from Feb. 20 to March 4 last did so. He asks $3,000 damages as a counterclaim.

A suit for $5,605 on a note has been filed in the Supreme Court by Benjamin Miners against the Adeline Amusement Co., Inc., and Max and Annette Marx Spiegel, who alleges that the corporation made a note on March 1 last, signed by Max Spiegel, which has not been paid. The papers were served on Max Spiegel at 1579 Broadway.

Danford Suining Mitchell
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Atlanta—Maurice Mitchell and C. Douglas Danford of the Standard Productions Co., are involved in litigation which started when the former secured an injunction restraining Mitchell from interfering with an examination of the books. Mitchell was cited for contempt of court, Danford claiming that he was not admitted after securing the injunction, and that case is pending. Still another step is the issuing of an order by Judge Bell restraining J. E. Mitchell, brother of Maurice Mitchell from signing checks on behalf of the Standard organization.

Deal With Red Cross
100 Subjects Go to Visual Education Society for Release—Some State Righters In It
Distribution of all American Red Cross films will be handled by the Society for Visual Education. There are 100 Red Cross films on the list, ranging from one to five reels. The cover will list each one of the Red Cross in this country and abroad. The exchanges, to date, through which these films have been distributed are as follows: Boston, Major Film Corp.; New York, Society for Visual Education; Chicago, Society for Visual Education; San Francisco, Edward H. Kemp; Washington, Southern Moving Picture Corp., Atlanta, Harcol Film Co.; Detroit, National Film Library; Oklahoma City, H. O. Davis. This list is expected to be extended rapidly in the next few months. A number of new Junior Red Cross films, recently taken in Europe, are to be added to the releases.

"Holmes" Title Suit

The suit brought to make Educational Change Names of Its Stoll Series of Pictures

Justice O'Malley of the Supreme Court has set a day for Aug. 18 for the injunction proceedings brought by William Gillette, Charles Frohman, Inc., and Eleet Enterprises, Inc., against the Stoll Film Co., Ltd., the Educational Film Exchanges. The plaintiffs are asking for an injunction against the defendants for infringing on their rights to the pictures "Sherlock Holmes." It is alleged that the Stoll concern produced 15 motion pictures in first series, two reels each, which are called "Sherlock Holmes" and also "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes." These titles are being disputed, it is alleged, without any license consent from the plaintiffs. The Stoll defendants state that any breach of the complaint, as based on prior case by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, has no bearing on the motion picture industry of the plaintiffs and which are marketed as "Sherlock Holmes." If the suit is decided in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendants claim will be vacated in operation, which will result in the sale of the pictures for $150,000 to produce. The plaintiffs also assert that not only will they be able to sell non-exclusive films, but that the motion pictures cause them injury and reduce the value of their production, which besides, it does not do the public. A.W. Hammons of Educational Film yesterday said: "The suit is based upon a supposed copyright contract entered upon some years ago between William Gillette and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Our contract does not give the rights to a breach, and the defendants are asked to require that we reprint the words 'Sherlock Holmes' in advertising, to a size type 25% larger than the words in the title of previous adventures. Of course, we will not submit to that."

No Successor Yet for "Cubby"

The next national consists of 45 employees. Cubbery, as noted, will devote all of his time to the state of Finkelstein and Ruben's hunting business.

"Cap. Applejack" First

Fred Niblo to Start It in September

Fred Niblo was the guest of honor at a luncheon given him by Metro yesterday. The luncheon was held at the Astor with about 40 present.

An announcement today that Mr. Niblo's first picture for Metro will be "Captain Applejack" which last night played its 200th performance at the Cort theater. The picture will be made on the coast and will enter production sometime next month.

It will be the first four pictures which Niblo will make under the Louis B. Mayer banner for Metro despite the fact that the director is here with Charles Condon. Mayer's director of publicity will probably leave for the coast on Sunday. He has been discr. to see some of the new plays.

Kent Closes Deal

Arranges with Finkelstein and Ruben for Paramount Product on Three Year Contract

Sidney R. Kent, general manager of distribution of Famous Players, returned to New York yesterday after an extended tour of the country. The plans were made during this tour which he personally attended to was the consummation of a three-year contract with Finkelstein and Ruben for Paramount product. Kent secured the Paramount product in a stipulated number of its theaters for the life of the contract.

The arrangement became effective on August 7 with the first picture, "While Satan Sleeps." While Mr. Kent did not care to discuss the amount of money involved, it is understood from Minneapolis that about $1,500,000 is figure.

From the Northwest city came word that the pictures will be shown at the State, Lyric and Strand theaters in Minneapolis and the New Astor, and New Garrick in St. Paul. It was recalled yesterday that recent differences between Famous Players and Finkelstein and Ruben led to an arrangement whereby Paramount pictures were shown first run in the Bremer-Minneapolis and the Tower, St. Paul. In the latter city, another arrangement entered upon at the same time with eight suburban theaters gave those houses first run picture and date for the first three days of the week.

Kent stated yesterday conditions in Chicago and the West were still far from satisfactory. He added, however, that he looked for a decided upturn in the near future and remarked that there was a good deal of confidence among theater men so far as the future was concerned.

He refused to comment on the deal in the South whereby Famous Players will take over the five exchanges of present owners of Southern Enterprises Inc. on Sept. 1.

Independents Affiliated in Graphic Film's Plan to Discuss Three-Cornered Tie-Up Monday

A number of independent exchange men affiliated with Ivan Abramson in the recently created Graphic franchise will be in New York on Monday and Tuesday of next week to discuss with Abramson a three-cornered plan, which an announcement issued yesterday said, would include exchange producer and exhibitor "under one roof." (Continued on Page 3)
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

From the Flagpole
Boise, Idaho.—The Pacific National Bank has a huge flag pole which has never before been used to fly anything but Old Glory. However, Walter M. Mendenhall, of the Pinney and Kimpton Company, talking to a friend about placing an independent banner on the pole, said: "Some day we will hang something else up there besides those safe, safe, safe American colors." A few days later Mendenhall called the attention of the office to the presence of a three-lettered sign reading: "Before I decided to 'Turn to the Right,' I'd had the banner put up by me with the same inscription, but before it was changed to "After.'"

Pay Day Envelopes for "Pay Day"
Lafayette, Ind.—Thousands of prospective patrons were reached by Manager Martin A. LaCivit of the Arc with pay day envelopes when he played "Pay Day." Enclosed was a check from "First National" giving a a tie-up with the bank which advertised the picture. The check was good for one million dollars worth of laughs.

A Barrel Stunt
Springfield, III.—To exploit "The Trap," A. G. Kerosates of the Strand and Royal worked the old barrel trick. He used about a dozen barrels, marking each one, "DANGER!" This plus the human inquisitiveness element secured the desired results.

Gave Away Ice Cream
Schenectady, N. Y.—Manager Shirley of the Strand topped off his successful street contest with the use of ice cream cones for his showing of "Penrod." The ice cream during hot weather brought a response from the audience that surpassed the manager's fondest hopes. A deal was arranged whereby the International Ice Cream Co., in return for some advertising furnished enough cream for a cone for each child. Outside the theater was a white cloth table upon which a lady dressed in white presided. Each child entering for the matinee was given a cone. More than 10 gallons of ice cream was used during each day, but the result justified advertising of the production recorded a knockout matinee attendance with a promise of a capacity showing for the evening performances.

Worked Various Angles
Austin, Tex.—Manager Ray Whitfield of the Majestic built a money-compelling lobby for "Beauty's Worth," the basis being a six-sheet cut-out of Marion Davies seated on a throne. Plush curtains were borrowed from a local interior decorator shop and hung artistically to frame the figure. Imitation marble columns made of wallboard and large palms made it an inviting entrance. Whitfield also tied up with the Austin American for an extra advertisement: "What is Beauty's Worth?" This got light page publicity. A radio set was donated by a local dealer for $35 watch by a local jeweler for prizes. To build good-will, Whitfield invited the inmates of the Confederate Home, the Old Men's Home, and the town's two orphanages for a special performance. The cost of the advertisement was $25 and it increased business 15 per cent.

Had Unique Display
Evanson, Ill.—One week before W. G. Sturdivant, manager of the Seymour Hoyburn, opened with "The Iron Trail," he put a table on his lobby. Behind seven, in his outer lobby. On front, hanging down, was a big sign with the title of the production, top being covered green, and was a background representing a city view, on which was another sign with the name of Rex Beach and film. On the table was a cutout, running on a miniature track with a station, two bridges, street cars, tunnel, etc., making an interesting display.

WANTING To Whom It May Concern:
Our attention having been called to the fact that certain processes for lengthening the life of motion picture films, reducing wear and tear and adding to the brilliancy of the picture by a method of chemically or otherwise treating the emulsion side of the film, have been and are being offered to the trade, we hereby give notice to all persons interested that we are the sole owners of the basic United States Patents covering all motion pictures so treated or "processed," including the basic patent on the finished motion picture itself after having been "processed." That in addition to these basic patents we have other patents pending covering the latest improved methods and machines for insuring the most perfect results.

We hereby warn all persons, manufacturing, dealing in or exhibiting films so "processed," that they are trespassing upon our exclusive rights, and that their violations must cease immediately, and that they will be held strictly accountable for each and every such infringement of our patents to the full extent of the law.

If Industry is to Be Stabilized, Coast Lawyer Writes Will H. Hays—Explains Why

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—While Will H. Hays was at the Association's meeting in London, an attorney with offices here, wrote and delivered a letter to the former postmaster-general in which he stressed the point that the stability of the industry rested upon the encouragement of the independent producer.

London's office stationery describes him as an attorney whose practice is "limited to pictures matters.

In his letter he says in part: "Everyone engaged or associated, directly or indirectly, in the motion picture industry who believes in you and the honesty of purpose of the association, owes to you the duty of rendering every assistance possible that is justified toward the objects and purposes of the association.

"In offering to you the assistance which the consciousness of duty compels, permit me to urge upon you the conclusion that a wide range of motion picture experience, extending back more than ten years, has forced upon me: "That the stability of the motion picture industry rests upon independent motion picture production.

"Unless it is made possible for the independent producer to enter the field of motion picture production on a stabilized business basis, that attends other industries, the industry will not lift itself to the planes of others that enjoy the confidence of the public.

"Up to this time, the distributor in almost every instance has literally robbed the independent producer both of his product and the profits which he is justly entitled, through unscrupulous methods which seem to have become the custom and rule; and the reputation that the distributor has brought upon himself, by reason of these unscrupulous methods, has done more to drive capital from the industry than all other attending evils of the industry combined.

"It is following the progressive steps of independent production it will be readily seen that upon its wholesome existence depends the realization of creative thought that is and will ever be the foundation upon which we must build motion pictures—upon the three who contribute to the making of motion pictures and without them and their independence, guaranteed by the adoption and enforcement of the highest standards and ethics in the dealings between independent distributor and independent producer, the public will be as they now are—deprived of better and cleaner pictures at lower admission prices."

No one at the Hays office yesterday recalled definitely whether Mr. Hays had received the letter. It was said it might have been brought East with a mass of other correspondence.

At all events, no definite action has been taken.

Plan Similar to Labor Film Service Here To Be Tried in Berlin—Throughout Germany

According to the New York Times, a group of representative trade unions in Germany has formed the Volks Film Bühne for the purpose of entering production and distribution.

"In an attempt," says the Times, "to emulate the success of the Free Volks Film Bühne, which, from a modest beginning a number of years ago, has grown to be a power in the German theater world and has 100,000 members in Berlin alone, a group of representatives of trade unions met in the German capital a few days ago and organized the Volks Film Bühne. The new institution plans to establish its own motion-picture houses all over the country and also to go into the producing business. Several film experts have offered their services, and working class control of the organization is to be afforded through the election of four of the nine members of the Board of Management by the Berlin Central Labor Union, the Clerical Workers' Union, the Teachers' Union and the Moving Picture Workers' Union.

The Times report on the Volks Film Bühne says they are going to supply the members with good, high-class shows at moderate prices and will do their best to cut out the militarist and motorist films which have aroused so much comment in Germany of late. Tramp films are also to be subjected to attack. The Berlin Freiheit points out that, of the 2,500,000,000 marks spent in motion pictures, 900,000,000 went to Saloon Habitués.

When the 18th Amendment was adopted there were 177,790 of these places in the United States. Estimating that average of 50 people per day visit each saloon (which is exceedingly conservative), it is figured that people spent the margin between subsistence and the fruits of life in these places. They left little for the drinker to take for himself or even himself to a place wholesome amusement. The more became a slave to the drink habit, the less desire he had for such entertainment, for the atmosphere and condition of the average bar room foreign to the motives that go into a good film.

While the moving picture theater still had to a large extent even with the saloons open, yet 177,790 of them caved, seven million saloon habituates turned another form of recreation and amusement. The moving picture theater was the natural substitute for the saloon. The price of admission was low. To look at the pictures required no great financial effort. A full glass of alcoholics was attracted to wholesome kind of amusement; in addition, their families and friends were inclined to become interested in earnings. Money formerly spent on foolish indulgence was now used to seek lower rentals.

Canada Strife Ends

Competition Between Loew and Pantages Terminated—Agreement at Hamilton, Ont. (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Hamilton, Ont.—What is taken to be the cutting edge of the rivalry between Marcus Loew and Alexander Pantages in Eastern Canada, takes form in the announcement of the formation of the Hamilton United Theaters, Ltd., here. By it, the Loew and Pantages theaters are merged into one.

The desirability of uniting the two theaters had been considered for some time, and under the one control, it is stated, a very large saving will be effected in operating costs. The theaters, both of which are practically new, are in the one block and there has been fierce competition.

In the new company, the Pantages interests will hold preferred and common stock amounting to $1,800,000, 4,375 paid-up cumulative preferred shares of $100 each and 6,300 paid-up shares of common stock at $12.50. Loew's will hold stock to the value of $900,000, according to the agreement, this comprising 3,500 preferred shares and 2,500 common shares.

The Pantages opened in Hamilton on Oct. 3, 1921, and was in operation for 44 weeks when amalgamation took place. A financial statement for the first 39 weeks showed profits of $73,000, before depreciating charges for plant and income tax.

The current liabilities unpaid amounted to $56,822.40. There is a mortgage of $150,000.

Toronto.—A meeting of Hamilton Theaters, Ltd., the company which has been operating the Pantages in Hamilton, is to be held in Toronto in a week. It is understood that N. L. Nathanson is directly interested in the theater.

picture houses last year, at least 80% of the personnel of the working masses, and it opines that it would be a good thing to keep this money in the union organizations and to whom H. Stinnes and his associates.

A similar plan has been tried here when the Labor Film Service, Inc., was formed some time ago. The project was backed officially by the central federation of unions in the United Kingdom. The purposes of the organization were to produce and then distribute motion pictures which described a light apart from that of the manufacturing interests.

The assertion was made that labor was always shown in an unfair manner, or that only one side of the picture was shown.

An organization of union workers also formed a theater company in Seattle and as a matter of fact, the recent convention of the American Federation of Labor revealed the interesting fact that the Federation was considering the launching of its own production and distribution machine. Apparently, only the fact that the members of the union would be the greatest restraints the ultimate carrying out of the project.

Find Projector Fault

Experts at Eastman Theater Discover Machine Don't Allow for Shrinkage in Film

(Rochester, N. Y.—An interesting discovery is claimed by the management of the Rochester United Theater that a machine it is using is in connection with standard projection machines.

When the selection of projection apparatus was considered, a sample machine was requested from each of the principal manufacturers. These machines were submitted for testing purposes and taken in hand by the technical experts. A few days later the engineer, Charles Goulding, received a report which stated that while several of the machines possessed in varying degrees the qualifications required for the theater, every projector submitted was deficient for the purposes of the average small low-priced theater. This, the report explained, was due to the fact that after its first run, film has a tendency to shrink and that none of the projectors submitted were adapted to accommodate this factor, with the result that defective projection would follow where old film is used.

An elaborate tabulation of facts, and drawings illustrating a simple method of overcoming the difficulty accompanied the report. These were given to the competing manufacturers to be subjected to the analysis of their engineers and laboratory experts. It is said few had given so much as a thought to the possibility of line and frame marking changes in the film until the subject was brought under scientific scrutiny through the circumstances described.

Now that attention has been directed to the possibility of improving projection generally through an insignificant and inexpensive alteration in the standardized projectors, the theater thinks it is a safe hazard to anticipate that the correction will automatically follow. As a matter of fact, two of the manufacturers who submitted projectors have made slight modifications of their machines to obviate the objectionable condition that the test disclosed.

The World on Hays

The World, in an editorial yesterday, said in part:

"According to Will H. Hays, nothing is wrong with motion pictures except youth.

"The excuse is ingenious but it is not clear how it applies. The movies may be young, but the principal marks of motion-picture art are not more youthful than other art. Can any other art, where a screen picture violates the canons of good taste, or is entitled to an exemption which would not be accorded to a daguerreotype or a plan photograph? Is scenario-writing, as a benefit of the public, any more suspect than the public enjoyment of a public broadcast because of its greater vulgarity, or is it any more susceptible to moral license."

The defects of the motion pictures have been no more evils of youth as errors of dramatic sensationalism which have grown out of undue sympathy with the conscience of the gambling house, or by laxity of regulation. The standards set are not too high for the young movie art as for the older art of painting and the theater. Motion-picture producers have not shown a deficiency except that now brought to our ears as want of money.

Universal Invites Clergymen

King Baggott has wired the Universal office suggesting an invitation to the clergy of New York to "Human Hearts," with the idea of impressing on them the fact that clean pictures are being made. From Drink to Films
for the benefit and pleasure of the entire family. The box office receipts are conclusive evidence that the prohibition or restriction of a harmful form of recreation and alleged pleasure helps the theaters and moving picture theaters financially. In spite of unfavorable financial conditions during 1921, the total box office receipts of the theaters, including the moving picture theaters, were $897,000,000; while in the pre-prohibition period of 1918 the receipts were $264,000,000. This increase of $633,- 000,000 in the business of the amusement purveyors was accomplished under prohibition.

In view of these startling facts, every owner and manager of a theater should hesitate to allow the stage or film to be used to fight the thing that has been of such tremendous benefit to them.

"The moving picture industry has received much criticism—not all of it constructive or complimentary. Some of it has been resentful, but it can be met and overcome only by bringing the industry up to the standard which the average, clean-minded American enjoys. People instinctively recognize in the screen an excellent medium for Art, an aid to culture, a supplement to the educational institutions, as well as a pastime for an idle hour. They are disappointed when it does not measure up to its possibilities. The producer who seeks simply to entertain is neither seizing his opportunity nor living up to his responsibility. The best screen artists do not long remain in the custard pie, slap-stick stage but develop to the point where they can interpret higher and finer emotions. If the moving picture is to evolve into a real art, as it can, it will lend its efforts to perpetuating the best things in our national life, inculcating patriotism, advocating law and order, and thus become a force that will raise our nation to higher levels.

"When films are shown which disregarde the duty of law observance or preach the doctrine of nullification of the Constitution, an influence is set in motion which is not only subversive of good morals but threats to undermine our government, upon which, in the last analysis, not only the prosperity of the moving picture industry, but the enjoyment of life and liberty and the very pursuit of happiness of the individual depends.

"Aside from the moral and civic duty resting upon it, the continued security of the industry itself depends upon the attitude which the business assumes to these fundamental principles of life. The theater will maintain its hold on American life by catering to the demand for wholesome amusement based on inspiring themes and patriotic motives and supplementing the work of the schools. The people want amusement, yes, fun, but they want more. The well-balanced moving picture will play upon the different strings of human emotion. It is imperative that this, one of the greatest beneficent inventions of man, be used as a constructive contribution to human progress."

paid for product of similar merit a year ago. Are you being "bounced" by the usual cry that the next sea son's pictures are going to be bigger and better than ever?

Don't forget that the country is now saturated with one of the worst railroad tie-ups in history. Bear in mind that there is going to be a big coal shortage, especially in the Northwest. So later than usual the State of Wisconsin issued orders that no more electric signs or other displays of obtaining reductions in order to conserve the coal.

"Why tie you up yourselves with longer contracts and long series of pictures, especially when you don't know what the pictures are going to be, other than the information you are received from well- schooled salesmen:

"I say let's buy service from 40 to 50% less than we paid before. If it isn't we might just as well get ready to turn our theaters into garages.

"Let's bear in mind that if the uniform contract, now being negotiated by the various organizations is adopted there will be no more possibility of getting out of the obligations of playing the pictures, as this contract is definitely going to bind you to fulfill its terms. In plain English you will have to pay or play for every picture at the price you contract for and you may lose a goodly percentage of conditions that may visit you.

"It is possible that the campaign for lower rentals will embrace the exhibitor units in Wisconsin and the Dakotas. Representatives of those bodies will be here in conjunction with the "Northwest Go to Movie Week," which will be launched immediately after the Minneapolis meeting.

"Elaborate plans are being made for that week. In Minneapolis prizes will be offered to exhibitors who stage the best stunt during the week. There will be $100. All sorts of special exploitation tricks will probably be worked. A special prize will be offered to exhibitors who complete their week of re-openers during that week which really heralds the new season.

Niblo and Valentino Make a Success of Ibanez Novel

Rodolph Valentino in “BLOOD AND SAND”
Paramount

DIRECTOR ......................... Fred Niblo
AUTHOR .......................... Vincente Blasco Ibanez
SCENARIO BY ..................... June Mathis
CAMERAMAN ...................... Alvin Wyckoff
AS A WHOLE ...... Likely destined to be one of the big pictures of the year both for the acting and the production

STORY ...... Highly colorful Spanish bull-ring story with much of the author's philosophy; beautifully executed

DIRECTION ..... Excellent; a worthy tribute to Niblo who deserves foremost credit for his fine work

PHOTOGRAPHY .................... Splendid LIGHTINGS ....................... Very good STAR ...... Has more opportunities for dramatic acting than heretofore and gives probably his very best performance

SUPPORT ...... Selected with evident care and discretion; Lila Lee more attractive than ever as Carmen; Nita Naldi and many others contribute to feature's success

EXTERIORS ........................ Realistic
INTERIORS ........................ Fitting
DETAIL .............................. Good

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Toreador's prowess in the ring is spoiled by woman who wins his love and then scorns him. He leaves the ring forever at the request of his wife who forgives him

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 7,235 feet

From all appearances Rodolph Valentino's first starring production, “Blood and Sand,” seems likely to be one of the year's big pictures not only from the box office angle but from an artistic standpoint as well. Further than that it puts Fred Niblo's name definitely on the list of great directors, for his accomplishment—the presentation of Vincente Blasco Ibanez' novel—is surely a noteworthy achievement. And lastly, the picture brings Valentino to what may be the pinnacle of his career for certainly he does his best work so far in “Blood and Sand.”

June Mathis wrote the scenario which retains practically the entire original story. It is a drama of the bull-ring and a more or less concealed indictment against this particular sport. Some of the author's philosophy is included through the character of the biologist who follows the careers of people who interest him. There is romance, tragedy and adventure in this highly colorful tale of Spain, one of the best of Ibanez's recent works.

Notwithstanding the fact that he had good material to work with, it remained for Niblo to visualize the author's ideas and it is to him that the foremost credit for the success of the production rightfully belongs. He has provided an unusually colorful and realistic atmosphere, an all around excellent production and executed the story with deftness and skill that never falters. The scenes of the bull fights are carefully done. Probably the average eye won't detect the views of a real fight which are included. Difference in photography is the only thing that makes them obvious. On the other hand the film has been excellently photographed.

Valentino has more opportunity for dramatic acting in this than he has had previously and he is far more pleasing and appealing than as a romantic lover. Lila Lee is pretty as the toreador's wife and Nita Naldi, a compelling vamp. Other types are splendidly portrayed by George Field, Walter Long, Rose Rosanova, Leo White and Marie Marstini.

Story: Juan Gallardo becomes Spain's most famous toreador. During one of his triumphs in the ring he is attracted by Dona Sol, a Spanish beauty, who wins his love and later spurns him. Juan turns to dissipation and in the greatest fight of his career is tossed by the bull. In the crisis his wife, Carmen, comes back to him. He recovers and leaves the ring forever.

Fine Entertainment and Undoubtedly a Big Box Office Find

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You will surely want to book “Blood and Sand” for a run and judging from its reception on Broadway they will flock to see it. And it is apparently the star's name which is drawing the crowds because when he played at the same theater in “Beyond the Rocks” with Gloria Swanson, the theater was packed. It might have been either Miss Swanson or Valentino, in that case, which drew them, but then came Miss Swanson alone in “The Gilded Cage” and there was not such a crowd, but with “Blood and Sand” the same demand for seats is repeated.

So it is evident that you can cash in with the star's name. Tell them this is his first starring vehicle. Say “Blood and Sand” is from the famous novel by Vincente Blasco Ibanez, author of “The Four Horsemen,” in which Valentino appeared, and the play by Tom Cushing, in which Otis Skinner starred on Broadway. Properly handled it should bring highly satisfactory results.

DETAIL ..................... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY......The regeneration of a crook by his own will without the outward influence of anyone aiming to reform him
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,770 feet

Marshall Neilan's latest production easily claims the distinction of being the most interesting crook picture released so far this year, and also one of the best directed pictures. The producer has taken a story suggested by Hugh MacNair Kahler's story, a not unusual crook regeneration theme, and shaped it into an absorbing entertainment through skillful direction that is chiefly composed of common sense and the right sort of application. Neilan has a faculty of applying deft touches that make common things entirely uncommon and it is just that quality in his direction that makes "Fools First" a thoroughly interesting feature.

Often crook stories are so exaggerated and unreal that the spectator must have an enlarged imagination to get any enjoyment out of them but such is not the case with this one. Nothing is overdone or too stressed. The underworld sequences are not represented by smoke filled hop joints nor is the "gang" made up of a great assortment of natural freaks. At the same time they are fine types for the characters they represent and you couldn't ask for a better performance than that given by Raymond Griffith as "Tony, the Wop," leader of the gang. He is just daring enough and quick to act and at the same time smilingly cunning.

The development of the regeneration theme is particularly good. There is no preachment nor obvious effort by anyone to do any reforming. It is just a natural result of association, cleverly handled. There is probably but one bit that may strike some as being improbable. It is the ruse the crooks adopt to throw the "bulls" off the track when one of their members is murdered. They sit the dead man up to the card table and a man concealed in back of the body, play's the dead man's hand, fooling the cops.

Story: Tommy Frazer, one of a gang of crooks, contents himself with forgery while the others go in for bigger hauls. Tommy is caught and given three years. Upon his release Ann Whittaker, employed in the same office as Tommy when he was arrested, offers to get him in Denton Drew's bank on condition that he will work with her in a plan to rob the place. Tommy agrees but through association with Drew, whose confidence he has gained, Tommy realizes he wants to go straight. Ann insists upon putting over the deal but at the last minute Tommy balks and goes to Drew with a confession. Then he learns that Ann and Drew had planned his regeneration. Follows the clutch.

Promise A Crook Story Well Worth Seeing

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can safely promise your folks the most interesting and unusual crook picture they have seen in a long time. Appeal particularly to your men patrons, telling them they will find a new angle on crook regeneration in Marshall Neilan's latest offering, "Fools First." The story contains many surprises and you can assure them their attention will be held from start to finish and that there are several fine dramatic moments with real wallops.

Give the producer the proper prominence and use the names of Richard Dix and Claire Windsor. Raymond Griffith is not well known but his work as the Wop, should get him a place in your announcements. Others in the cast are Claude Gillingwater, George Siegmann, Helen Lynch and George Dromgold. Exploit the title and use it with catchlines that will give an idea of the story.

DIRECTION........... Very good with exception of a little too much detail; realistic and appropriate atmosphere

STAR............ Quite appealing and does good work even if you don’t always agree with her SUPPORT.......... Richard Dix and John Bowers give especially satisfactory performances with Bowers the hero

EXTERIORS ............. Good
INTERIORS ............. Suitable

DETAIL ............ Sometimes stressed

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Sea captain’s daughter spurns ship owner’s son and marries ship’s mate whom she reforms

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 7,178 feet

This latest production starring Betty Compson affords an entertainment that will probably please a big enough majority to make it worth while booking and John Wilson’s story is sufficiently original to prevent any hesitation on that score. “The Bonded Woman” is likely to strike some as being pretty far-fetched at first because it seems most improbable that a woman would give every penny she owned and would travel to Samoa to save a drunkard whom she felt indebted for saving her father’s life.

That is the situation which gives the piece a tendency toward being far-fetched. However, the climax explains it when the spectator learns that the girl is in love with the man she fought to save. In this connection there is a well sustained interest and you don’t know until the very end whether John Bowers, as the drunkard mate, or Richard Dix, as the ship owner’s son, is the hero of the story.

Director Rosen has provided an unusually fine and realistic production. The storm scenes aboard the ship are excellent and even the miniature used for long shots of the sinking is real enough looking. Occasionally he has gone a trifle too extensively into detail that isn’t quite necessary and makes the picture longer than it should be for the amount of story it contains.*

Betty Compson is thoroughly appealing as the captain’s daughter and her women admirers are quite certain to be interested in the character she portrays in this. Her method of winning the love of the man she wants is well worth seeing. John Bowers does good work also but he shouldn’t have been given close-ups that showed his face blackened to represent a heavy beard. Richard Dix should have had more to do.

Story: John Somers, mate on Captain Gaskell’s ship, saves the captain’s life when the ship is wrecked in a storm. Angela, Gaskell’s daughter, feels indebted to Somers, and tries to help him overcome his weakness for drink. He promises to give it up and to encourage him Angela mortgages her home in order to provide a bond for Somers that he may secure the captaincy of a vessel, owned by Lee Marvin’s father. Marvin, in love with Angela, is jealous of Somers. On the first trip the mate robs Somers and he loses his place. He disappears but Angela follows and eventually the two are happy.

Will Probably Get Over If You Can Get Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can probably please enough of your folks with Betty Compson’s latest feature, “The Bonded Woman.” If they like sea stories they will be particularly interested in this and you can make promises for the storm sequences, telling them the scenes are realistic and carry a thrill for those who like them.

The star’s name can be boosted if you know she is popular with your patrons and recall any of her recent offerings that have proved successful. Catchlines relative to the girl who traveled to Samoa to save the man she loved might attract them or a trailer showing the storm scenes might be a good way to bring them in. Stills in the lobby will interest them and if you go in for lobby display or stunt advertising the press sheet offers suggestions.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 5,106 feet

"The Woman Who Came Back" is an entertaining production, which holds the attention all the way through, but in its present form it resembles a novel more than it does a screen drama. The story is told in a fiction manner and long titles are required to explain the various complicated circumstances.
Lacking in action one would expect that special attention would be paid to characterization, but the people presented in "The Woman Who Came Back" impress one as very artificial. They appear as mere puppets in unreal situations. The attention is held by the foreground atmosphere and the many situations.

The scenes at Oxford University, where the young hero is a student, will attract. The story, for the most part, is biographical. It traces the life of a young orphan who is very ambitious and wants to make a success in the world. He leaves the sea and works his way through school and college. Then he falls in love with a wilful girl, but is forbidden to marry her until he can reach her social level by securing an income of $25,000 a year. But nothing stops the young hero. He goes down to Texas, armed with a classical education and a good knowledge of Ancient Greek, and before the year is up, returns to England with the necessary coin. Dick Turpin and Jessie James were small change artists compared to David Standish, the hero of this offering. If David had only engaged in robbery we would at least have had some action, but you are told that he merely struck luck in the oil fields. Such things have been known to happen, but American heroes are loved not because of their luck, but because they have pluck and daring, and make their successes through effort and work.

The director has followed the novel very closely and has done well with a complicated theme and a limited cast. The leading roles are played by Evelyn Brent and Clive Brook. Supporting them in the cast are M. Gray Murry, Hetta Bartlett, Cyril Raymond, George Travers and Olaf Hytten.

Story: The engagement between Sonia and David is broken off when it is found out that David is earning his tuition by working as a waiter. He then goes to America where he cleans up in the oil fields, but returning to England finds that Sonia has gone off on a motor trip through Germany. Her companion deserts her just as the war breaks out and David goes into Germany with his partner's American passport and manages to get her released. But still her haughty spirit is unbroken. And not until David is blinded in the war does she join hands with him.

Play Up Foreign Atmosphere And Situations
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Woman Who Came Back" is certainly not a picture of action, but its situations and atmosphere are a little different from the usual run of pictures, and it can be relied upon to hold the attention and entertain the average audience.

The novel "Sonia" has had a wide circulation, and its name should be used in connection with the showing of this production. Do not make too much fuss about it or try to make a sensation out of it, but just run it into your bill as you would any other polite drama.

While the characters of this drama will not convince a critical audience, they will nevertheless prove of interest and hold the attention. A catch line might read: "In 'The Woman who Came Back,' you will see a love battle between a stubborn girl and a man with iron will. The battle takes place at the Theater."

DIRECTION ...... Ordinary; goes to the extreme at times to impress the spectator with "what is wrong"

LIGHTINGS ................ Usually good
PLAYERS............. Includes well known names but nearly everyone in the cast overacts, Hedda Hopper a chief offender; others are Constance Bennett, Montague Love, Barbara Castleton, Rod La Roque
EXTERIORS ................ Few
INTERIORS ................. Adequate
DETAIL .................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Happy young wife is induced to accept the pleasures offered by rich rounder but is reunited with her husband through an accident suffered by her child
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 6,400 feet

The title is certainly a good one and quite likely to make this latest Equity production a good attraction as far as bringing them to the box office window is concerned because the theme is more or less of a current topic and undoubtedly a good many will be interested to know just what Daniel Carson Goodman thinks is wrong with the present generation of women, whether they happen to agree with his theory or not.

According to the author the main trouble with women of the present time is that they are dissatisfied and too fond of pleasure and to this end he weaves his story around two families, one rich and one poor, in which the daughter in one case, and wife in the other, seek the good things of life regardless of consequences and without considering others. So far as what is wrong with women is concerned, the story is quite plausible and sufficiently consistent but there is also something terribly wrong with the men, which the author has made no effort to analyze, unless perhaps he intends to follow "What's Wrong With the Women," with a sequel, "What's Wrong With the Men." And there is something vitally wrong with young Jack Lee and with the rich and elderly Mr. Bascom.

Goodman's reasoning is not always clear. He has one woman, who wants the rich James Belden for herself, introduce the young wife to him as a means of securing him for herself. Inasmuch as the wife is younger and more beautiful her method is not at all obvious. The direction is fair. The picture is too long and there is an anti-climax in which the little child falls out of the window in order to reunite the mother and father. A bearded "healer" seems out of place in the story. The jazz sequences are exaggerated and the shimmy exhibit is more than likely to be tabooed.

Barbara Castleton, as the young wife, gives the best performance and Rod La Roque does satisfactory work but Constance Bennett tries to be too willowy and blase while Hedda Hopper overacts all the way through.

Story: Jack and Janet are quite happy until Mrs. Lee, across the hall, persuades Janet to accompany her to parties, while Jack minds the baby. Janet tries to imitate her high life friends, neglecting her husband and child. Eventually she realizes her mistake and while she is telling them she is going to give it up, her little girl is injured. This brings about the reunion of the husband and wife.

A Good Title For Exploitation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

With "What's Wrong With the Women" is a matter of just what type of audience you cater to. If they like the more sensational form of entertainment, stories dealing with the present day fast set, you can be sure they'll like this one. Or if you think the moral lesson which it offers will appeal to them, you might please them. Probably your local reform organizations would be only too glad to cooperate with you in interesting patronage and, of course, the title has a drawing power.

Post the title of the picture prominently well in advance and you might describe it as an expose of modern living, its mistakes and remedies. There are well known names in the cast that you can use and if you think the author's name will attract, use it also.
Story Based On Power of Faith to Cure Ills Will Interest Many

DIRECTOR .......... Benj. B. Hampton and associates
AUTHOR ............ Clara Louise Burnham
SCENARIO BY .......... Not credited
CAMERAMAN .......... Gus Peterson and Friend Baker
AS A WHOLE......A rather good picture for those who like simple stories in preference to melodrama or straight drama

STORY......Built upon the idea of faith as a power of healing; has a tendency towards a certain religious belief

DIRECTION......Good for the most part; some very effective touches; one or two sequences too prolonged

PHOTOGRAPHY ............ Very good
LIGHTINGS ............... All right
PLAYERS......All do satisfactory work; Claire Adams, Claire McDowell, Robert McKim and Carl Gantvoort, the principals; Betty Brice gives excellent characterization

EXTERIORS ...................... Pretty
INTERIORS ..................... Suitable
DETAIL ......................... Sufficient
CHARACTER OF STORY ........ The faith of a mother cures her son's crippled child and restores the health of his employer's daughter

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....5,500 feet

Benjamin B. Hampton's latest production, made from a story by Clara Louise Burnham, should prove a very interesting feature to a great many, particularly those who believe in the power of faith to heal, a subject which is the real basis of the story and through which two miraculous cures are effected during its course. This angle of the offering should give the picture a wide appeal.

There is also a good deal of human interest that is brought out through deft directorial touches and especially through the appearance of the two children, splendidly played by Frankie Lee and Mary Jane Irving. The attention is well held and the development is quite smooth. There are one or two sequences which have been accorded more footage than necessary, such as that in which the young girl is miraculously cured through the faith of her mother. It is just a bit agonizing to watch the girl arising from her couch and going through the process of the cure which banishes a broken back. No footage is wasted, however, in reaching the conclusion.

The usual Hampton comedy relief is found in the character of Pynch, a butler, played by Frank Hayes, and Mrs. Harohan, the housekeeper, portrayed by Aggie Herring. Quite a few laughs come from Pynch's petty ailments and his various medicinal remedies. An unusually interesting characterization is given by Betty Brice as the pleasure loving wife of hero Carl Gantvoort. Miss Brice is strictly opposed to her husband's mother and when she goes away with her lover she leaves a note reading, "If my going wounds you, get your mother to heal it."

Claire McDowell, as the healer, is sincere, if not always convincing, and Gantvoort, McKim and Claire Adams are quite suitable. Frankie Lee and Mary Jane Irving are delightful juvenile types and Jean Her sholt is the nearest approach to a villain.

Story: Joe Laird secures the position of private secretary to Adam Breed. Mrs. Laird objects to Joe's mother coming to live with them and laughs at her promise to cure little Bobbie Laird of his affliction, through prayer. Breed's daughter, Vivian, is seriously injured by rescuing Laird's little girl who is caught in a tree. Joe's mother once more prays for the girl's recovery. Meantime Mrs. Laird elopes with an old suitor and is killed. Vivian gets well and sometime later marries Laird while Mr. Breed recognizes in Laird's mother his old sweetheart, May Caroline.

Likely to Please and Can Stand Exploiting

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Heart's Haven" should prove a sure-fire success in localities where people are strong in their religious beliefs and particularly where a certain faith which practices faith as a means of healing is established, the production should go over big. You might even secure the co-operation of these people who may be interested in the story.

If you know your folks like simple stories, you can be quite sure they will like "Heart's Haven." It will probably not please those who want action or plenty of plot in their picture entertainment. There are names in the cast that can be used in your advertising and the Hodkinson organization has prepared an extensive press book which will assist you in putting the picture over.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...........4,453 feet

Shirley Mason has another good little picture in "The New Teacher," a story that suits her personality and contains a pleasing romance, the kind that will satisfy a good majority of audiences, and the star's admirers in particular. It contains rather slight situations but after all, these are the best for star and provide the right sort of vehicle for her. It is chiefly romance with some heart interest sequences woven in. The rich girl's desire to do good is accomplished through teaching poor children and in her successful attempt to restore a little blind girl's sight by providing proper medical attention. The director has gotten in some worth while touches in this connection and little Helen Stone who portrays the blind child, deserves mention for the good work she does. Little Pat Moore, as her brother, is always an appealing youngster.

The story also contains a few bits of action, hero's encounter with a burglar and later the star's fight with the same man and finally the effort of hero to capture the girl's assailant whom he recognizes as the burglar and the latter's death when he falls while trying to escape. Director Franz has included one or two good bits of suspense that get over. One is where the little negro boy climbs a flag pole and is afraid to come down. You are lead to believe that the boy will fall before rescued; and another is that in which the little blind girl climbs out of a window mistaking it for one which has a fire escape outside. The villain is attacking the heroine at this point and once more it looks as though the child would fall to the street but here again is a last minute rescue.

Shirley Mason is as appealing as usual and her admirers will like her work and the part she plays in "The New Teacher." Alan Forest is her leading man and Earl Metcalf is the villain. The cast, on the whole is a good one and the production is up to standard.

Story: Constance Bailey refuses to marry Bruce Von Griff because she believes she must first accomplish some good in the world. So Constance becomes a school teacher in New York and is surprised one day to see Bruce in a policeman's uniform. He has followed to be near her and joined the force to be doing good also. Bruce keeps on proposing and one day rescues Constance from Ed Hurley. Eventually after Constance has completed her good work, cared for a family of poor people and had a little girl's sight restored, she accepts Bruce.

Nice Romance and an Appealing Star For You to Talk About

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who usually please their folks with the Shirley Mason features can show their folks this one also and be able to satisfy them. It is an interesting romance and a particularly appropriate one for the star. You can promise them Shirley Mason is as pleasing as ever as Constance Bailey, "The New Teacher."

Your folks have probably seen the star in every kind of a role. Tell them in her latest picture, she's a school teacher. Catchlines will give a further idea of what it is about and stills in the lobby will also attract. A lobby display might draw a crowd if you staged a school room with a teacher and some typical bad boy pupils. Play up the title with the star's name well in advance of the showing.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Russian refugee believes in her power to heal until man she loves refuses to have faith in her power

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 6,997 feet

There have been any number of “miracle” pictures since George Loane Tucker's now famous "The Mir-cle Man" and Richard Washburn Child's, "The Hands of Nara" is just another despite the apparently sincere effort of all concerned to make it distinctive and unusual. The trouble with most of the miracle stories is that the subject is taken too seriously. In this case the point—power of faith to heal bodily ills—is argued pro and con in numerous conversational titles that lessen the picture's value as entertainment and make it draggy and uninteresting.

At the outset the picture promises to be a thoroughly interest one dealing with the flight of a Russian refugee and her subsequent arrival in America where her beauty attracts an artist. But at this point there is a break and the story resolves into a long discussion on faith as a healer, with the various characters taking opposite sides in the controversy until the feature becomes little short of a screen debate.

Child's novel does not lend itself readily to picture adaptation and it has obvious been a difficult one to handle because of the controversial nature of it. And it is not a theme that will appeal to everyone. The faith healing angle is not purely the business of a fakir but the actual belief of the beautiful healer with specicific instances of her power presented. In this respect the story is almost certain to appear far-fetched and unconvincing for a good many, at least.

Harry Garson tells the story well enough but his picture is too long notwithstanding that there have already been some eliminations if the synopsis sheet reads correctly. The numerous sub-titles also help to extend the footage. Clara Kimball Young gives a very good performance and a sincere one. The supporting cast is well suited and capable.

Story: Nara, a Russian refugee, comes to America where Connor Lee, a fakir, persuades her that in her hands she has the power to heal the sick. Nara is fully convinced of her power but is rebuked by Emlen Claveloux, a scientist, with whom she is in love. Sometime later Emlen's father, a doctor, begs Nara to cure his wife who is beyond his aid. She does but once more meets with Emlen's rebuff. She leaves the house but a mysterious influence draws Emlen to her and they are reconciled.

Better See This and Decide Whether Or Not It Will Do
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors know the likes and dislikes of their particular clientele best and it will probably be necessary for them to see this one for themselves to decide whether or not it will satisfy their patrons. The story is not one that will appeal to everyone, especially its latter sequences dealing with the miraculous cures effected by supernatural means.

If they like Clara Kimball Young sufficiently well to be pleased regardless of what the story is, you can show it. The title is unusual and with catchlines might attract considerable attention. Use the author's name and if you can secure the cooperation of any local organization or body which is interested in the theory presented in Child's story, it would be a good means of putting the film over.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Country girl’s attempt to win town druggist’s son by threatening to expose father’s operation of a still

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......... 5,000 feet

It is apparent that this first independent production of Dorothy Gish’s has been revised through the use of both the main and sub-titles, in order to bring it up-to-date and at the same time to take advantage of the present flapper rage and since the character played by Miss Gish is not what the regular flapper girl is purported to be, they have called it “The Country Flapper,” a branch of the flapper rage that city folks will have to take for granted.

The story, if it is a story at all, was suggested by Malbro Bartley’s “Cynic Effect.” However, the producer admits in the opening title, that no attempt has been made to include a plot so you are saved the trouble of looking for one. “The Country Flapper” is a series of incidents and slight situations strung together by the means of a great many sub-titles, without which, the picture would hardly have extended to the regulation feature length. In substance, too, the film has more of the characteristics of a two-reeler.

F. Richard Jones has made use of his Sennett training by using typical Sennett touches and a little more slap-stick than necessary. And instead of the proverbial Keystone police force, a hick fire department adds another comic gag. The majority of laughs come from Joseph W. Farnham’s sub-titles which are written in flapper language and usually worthy of the laughs they draw. At least a Broadway audience got a lot of amusement out of them.

Dorothy Gish is herself in the role of the country flapper whose only desire is a bean, and Glenn Hunter portrays the object of her desires. Hunter is natural except for the movie idea of hick attire that he wears.

Story: The flapper is kept on the jump trying to retain her place in the affections of young Huggins, son of the town druggist, whose father is plainly opposed to any such “goings on” until Dorothy overhears a conversation which gives away old Huggins’ secret—that he has a still in his barn. Dorothy gets busy blackmailing Huggins, finally gaining his consent to her having his son for a beau. Meantime Huggins sets fire to the barn to destroy evidence and in the excitement Dorothy’s beau is won over by the enemy, Marguerite, so Dorothy contents herself with the bashful boy, her devoted slave through the whole five reels.

Title and Star’s Name Will Undoubtedly Bring Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Probably your folks will be satisfied with the comedy offered in Dorothy Gish’s offering because of the inimitable style of the star and her ability to register comedy business, and also because they will enjoy the sub-titles. If you think they will be satisfied without a particularly strong comedy story, you need not worry about showing them “The Country Flapper.”

There isn’t a doubt but what the title will draw good business. The flapper rage is sufficiently new to arouse their curiosity and bring them in. You can bet all your local flapper crowd will be on hand when you announce Dorothy Gish as the flapper, you can be assured they will want to see her. Boost the title for it is your best exploiting angle, aside from the star’s name.
Some Short Reels

“A Ladies’ Man”—Hunt Stromberg Prod.—Metro

Type of production........................................3 reel comedy

Bull Montana plays the leading role in this very novel three reel comedy filled with laughs and amusing situations. The story is told of a child who is adopted into a rich family. He is brought up like any good little boy but turns out to be a rough-neck. He runs away from home when he is quite young and the picture really begins when he returns home.

For this occasion his mother has invited a large gathering of society folk and you can imagine their surprise when dear little “Oswald” turns out to be a regular hard guy—as hard as Bull Montana ever appeared. Then the fun begins. Oswald brings his pals along with him and they provoke a good deal of laughter when they try to play the part of gentlemen. At first they receive a cold shoulder from the society guests but after a little encounter with some burglars they become idolized heroes. That is how Oswald becomes “A Ladies’ Man.” Now Oswald did not care very much for the stock and bond business and decided to open a gymnasium to accommodate the fair sex. The last scenes in this very laughable comedy are laid out in the suburbs in a house where two maiden ladies are being harassed by ghosts and terrorized by intruders. The ladies’ man arrives with his two fist-clasping assistants and cleans out the place.

Bull Montana presents a new type of comic character that is full of possibilities and also full of laughs. The humor is whimsical and at the same time in keeping with the story. This comedy is not a mere collection of gags but contains a real story that is at the same time funny. It is certain to entertain and wring laughter from any audience. It is novel and presents a comedy character entirely different from anything yet done on the screen. Use Bull Montana’s name when advertising the picture to your public.

“At Large”—Universal

Type of production..........................................2 reel western

Here is one of the very best that Tom Santschi has made in some time. The story is good, the photography excellent and the acting above the average for a two-reel western. Besides this a child adds a great amount of human interest and gives the production everything that a western needs. At the start of the picture Dan is unable to get medicine for his sick wife. Illness has taken his child from him and now his wife is threatened. He steals a horse to get the money to buy the medicine but is soon tracked to his home. When he is accused of being a horse thief, the excitement proves too much for his wife and she falls back apparently killed by the shock. Now Dan has nothing to live for and in desperation he rushes out of the room and jumping on a horse rides into the desert. Here in a shack he finds a baby girl who has just lost her mother. He buries the woman and takes the child with him. In the meantime the sheriff and his men are hunting the desert and one of the men, Pete, finds himself lost and without water. When Dan arrives he is too weak to shoot and falls from exhaustion. The hero gives him water and risks his own life by bringing in the sheriff’s man and the homeless child. He is pardoned his crime and is taken home where he finds that his wife had only fainted and was on the road to recovery. It is difficult to follow the end but it all turns out very satisfactory. The picture was directed by Robert North Bradbury and the excellent photography is by Virgil E. Miller. On the whole this is one of the very best that Tom Santschi has done in a long time.

“The First Barber”—Tony Sarg—Educational

Type of production........................................1 reel cartoon

Here is the first of a new series of Tony Sarg’s Almanac to be released by Educational. Sarg’s silhouette cartoons are already well known to the average audience. The figures are cut in amusing forms and are manipulated in a manner that adds greatly to their humor. These shadow cartoons are different from anything presented on the screen and their novelty alone is enough to warrant their success. But added to this there is a clean, keen humor which is irresistible. It will make a dead audience laugh and a live audience scream. Yet it is all so simple. In “The First Barber” you see how a tonsorial artist looked in the cave man days. Trimming is an old art. As far back as Adam and Eve, trimming was a gentle art from which few could escape. Tony Sarg cuts the little figures to fit the time and shows you a little domestic comedy filled with human interest. His beard was so long that it was difficult for the cave man to keep birds from the building nests in his hair. Surely it was time to go to a barber! Here the fun begins. The barber has many devices for amputating a gentleman’s locks. The shoe shine boy comes in for his share of the fun and the manicure girl shapes the ends of our prehistoric hero. A little bay-rum and lavender water sprayed lavishly finish the gentleman. But when he arrives home his wife is much upset over the smell. It was not at all to her liking and was enough to start a row. The remedy lay in a skunk who supplied an odor more agreeable to the woman in the story. After the husband has tampered with the skunk and finds himself back in his wife’s graces he is led to remark—“Oh! Well, you can never tell what a woman will like.” It doesn’t seem that any theater owner can go wrong in booking a series as novel and whimsical as Tony Sarg’s Almanac.

“Official Urban Movie Chats” No. 28—Hodkinson

Type of production........................................1 reel magazine

Views of Rome with its old castles and churches form the first chapter of this number of the Official Urban Movie Chats. A factory where overalls and mackinaws are made, comes next. Here each step in the process, from the cutting of the goods, hundreds at a time, to the finishing and packing, are shown. General Grant’s old home in Point Pleasant is illustrated in another chapter of this review which ends with some views of a bare-footed boy fishing by the bank of a shady stream. There are not very many subjects in this number of the Movie Chats but what there is is well photographed and interesting.

Pathé Review No. 169

Type of production........................................1 reel magazine

A special feature of this number is a chapter called “Super Golf.” Joseph Kirkwood, the Australian Champion illustrates some very direct and some very tricky shots on the links. Slow motion photography shows you exactly how it is done. Other chapters of this review show scenes at the sailor’s home in Staten Island and the modern cave dwellers in France. Some beautiful shots of cloud effects form an attractive chapter in this review which is up to the standard of the series. The subject matter is interesting and will hold the attention.

The WOMAN who CAME BACK

From the novel Sonia by Stephen McKenna

Directed by Denison Clift

with Evelyn Brent and Clive Brook

Catch the box office punch of that title. Visualize the words spread across your lobby with a smashing big cutout of the girl’s figure as shown on the right. It’s the subject of the impelling six sheet.

This is a feature with the dramatic lure which sells tickets; the kind of an offering that never fails to pull.

A beautiful, reckless girl who loves to play with fire. A strong, determined man so deeply in love that he would wager his life for her.

A trifle of dubious morals who plays with her adventuresome nature and leads her on. Then the big moment when the hero follows, fights, saves, scorns and forgives her in a final dramatic jolt.

Everything is in your favor. Play it up strongly.

Every American director. Every important American producer. Owes it to himself. To see the Louvre. It’s the palace of Paris. Where there is more art to the square inch. Than can be found anywhere in the world.

Oh; I can see the old heads shaking. I can see the old crowd. And almost hear them saying: “He’s off again.” But it isn’t so. If any director. Or producer. Cannot learn a tub-full. And more. In the way of composition. In direction. In definite effects. Of grouping and handling of individuals. From the paintings in the Louvre. Then I miss my guess.

Don’t start talking. About Art. With the capital A. That isn’t it at all. It’s simply a matter of good business. That’s all. There are some masterpieces. That all but talk to you. They are so perfect. And that is what moving pictures should do. They should be so complete; so perfect—in their composition, effects and purposes, as to tell you what is intended. Without Ralph Spence. Or anyone else fussing with the titles.

SCHOOLS NOT ONLY FOR STARS

But for directors as well. Perhaps all the directors and producers cannot come to Paris. All right. There are lots of magnificent art collections in America. Let them go there—wherever they are—and see if they can’t get an idea or two.

Everybody knows how the buck is passed. Everybody wants credit for the good stuff. And piles what’s wrong. On the other fellow. But if the stock companies and schools. That I read about. Are going to get anywhere. Let’s see what can be done for the director.

There are a lot of people who think they know it all. And there are a lot of people who hang around studios. Or Bryant Park. Who once upon a time. Belonged to this very same class.

GETTING THE MONEY

Understand old George Bowles. Has closed for “Orphans of the Storm.” To Films Erka. For France. And that the Paris premier will take place soon. Reported that Bowles got 750,000 francs for the show. That’s about $80,000. Which is a good price for France alone. Even for one of DW’s masterpieces.

It’ll be interesting. To see what the Parisians think. Of DW’s ideas of the Revolution; and how he has interwoven the old play into the picture. Because here is where the great old play got its real start.

MARCUS ARRIVES

Just to see how “Metro” looks in Paris—Marcus Loew and one of his sons. Are scheduled to arrive. In a day or so. Hope to catch him and get the news of what’s what. And who’s who. Jumping about so much haven’t been able to get the little old paper. So of course don’t know.

UP IN MABEL’S ROOM

At the Crillon. One of the very smart hotels. There are dressmakers. And milliners galore. Referring to Mabel Normand. Who has bought so much scenery. That when she shows (Continued on Page 2) up. On the Coast. A lot of other women are going to have their eyes turned green. With envy. Mabel buys wholesale. That is. She rests comfortably in front of her. And the manikins pass slowly in front of her. And if she likes anything—and she likes a lot—she falls for it, hook, line and sinker. And buys the whole darned thing. From shoes to hats—gown included.

HELLO; AL

Somebody told me. They read that Al Stoffes. Had come out in the open. And how he had changed his mind. And realized what a real man was—and is.

Well, if that's true. That's fine stuff. Because Al was one of them "show me" boys—who when they tried to show him—got nervous affection of the eye. And his feet got all wrapped up. With lumbago. Or something. At all events he couldn't be shown.

"Suzanna," the forthcoming production with Mabel Normand. Is being novelized by R. Drago and the Macaulay Co. will publish it. This reverses the more usual process of making a picture from a book.

Minter Enjoins Mundstuk

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Detroit—An injunction restraining Dave Mundstuck from interfering with his business has been secured by James Minter—United exchange. In a transaction made last winter, Mundstuck sold the exchange and Strand features to Minter for $47,000. So far, it is said, Mundstuck has received only $14,000 and he is suing on the ground that he is not receiving payments as frequently as he should.

O'Donnell Takes Issue

E. J. O'Donnell, educational sales manager for Fox, takes issue with some of the statements made by Eimer R. Pearson in his article which appeared in the Program Building Edition of THE FILM DAILY. O'Donnell takes exception to what he terms Pearson's discussion of "the morals of the screen," and quotes that portion of the latter's article in which he states "we may ascribe most of the attacks on the morality of the motion picture to those persons who are never happy unless they are crusading against something."

O'Donnell says:

"The leading educators of our land, as well as that great army of school teachers who fashion the character of youth and mould public opinion, cannot be accused of being jealou.s. Yet it is this body of intellectual leaders who are demanding better films—not so much better art, better intelligence or better entertainment—but better morals."

WHY RUN ANY RISK

The production of a motion picture feature costs my thousands of dollars. Why the risk of the success of that feature, using poor positive prints?

No longer is there the excuse that the outlay for good prints is too great. Our rates for high quality grade of prints is no greater than what old publicity charge for work that does not compare.

Our low rates are possible because our men are experts, because they use the most up-to-date, scientific labor-saving equipment yet invented: a famous Tubex equipment which insures absolutely clear perfect prints.

Telephone Bryant 1939 and ask how low these rates are.
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Sounded Bugle Calls

Omaha—An expert bugler, formerly in the service, was engaged by Mr. H. J. and the Rialto during the run of "One Clear Call." Standing on the marquee of the house he sounded the various calls from reveille, including the lesser-known calls. It proved to be a popular demonstration and increased patronage.

Here's Real Ingenuity

Madison, N. J.—Exploitation painted on the sidewalks has been in common use for some time but G. T. Spoffard of the Liberty, gave it a new angle when he played "Smilin' Through." Spoffard learned that the bulbs were being repaired, necessitating detours. For the benefit of motorists infati dated by these by-ways Spoff ard had the pavements painted "Go Smilin' Through" to Morristown.

Another sign read: "To Dover" indicating the direction of the intersection with an arrow. The city council was glad to consent to such a plan which gave the theatre a brilliant publicity and rendered a useful service. The American Automobile Association please take notice!

Teaser Ads Worked

Columbus, Ga.—Manager I. C.
Holloway had the curiosity of this towner at fever height by the time he opened "Lessons in Love" at the Rialto. About a week in advance, he started a teaser campaign in the daily papers by inserting a note and unostenious announcement that Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and the following week some plans would be given by an expert. Each lesson was to last only a trifle over an hour and was guaranteed to please. For the finale, the man called a given 'phone number. These changed only a little in wording, some giving the location of the theater. It was a potent appeal to the imagination and many a surreptitious call came to the theater for a little private information on the subject.

Getting Real Newspaper Space

Every town has its pet blind man
—some boot-black, newsboy, or street vendor that is more or less a town figure. Bill Danziger, a Paramount exploiter tied up with the town blind when the Illinois played "Our Leading Citizen" and grabbed a lot of free newspaper space.

The University Line managers invited Bob Purdy to "see" the picture and Danziger prepared several long newspaper stories about the possibility of putting a blind man holding a wrist of another person and receiving the screen story through the "Telepathic Theatre" Helen Keller device. Publicity or no publicity, it made a good newspaper yarn and the picture and the theater rode into the public consciousness at a wave of interest that attended the stunt.

An Error But It Helped

San Francisco—Because a newspaper rack was built at the bottom of the sign, the huge display adversing the "Crossroads of New York" at the intersection of Market, Kearny, Third and Geary Streets, re-donated for two weeks despite local ordinances.

The fact that the Chronicle was sold from the rack and that the display was regarded as a newspaper tie-up with all the privileges of the press rendered it safe from police interference. The result was that the picture at the California got the benefit of the most prominent publicity space in the city without any more than the´adhesions of an unobtrusive sign. It is to be used later for the "One Clear Call" at the Tivoli.

Wolves Supplied Idea

Creston, Ia.—Coincidence and an ability to recognize and take advantage of an opportunity quickly was a success to Manager E. Metzer of the Strand during his showing of "The Silent Call." The newspapers carried a story about a farmer who had mapped five young wolf cubs and figured on the bounty he would get for them. Metzer reached the farm in time, secured their loan for his house during the run of the film and then held a special matinee offering to boys bringing dogs with some wolf strain in them. More than 200 youngsters responded and even water spainers were led forward with the assertion that they had a wolf strain. The judges were liberal in their decision and could afford to be so—free advertising given the picture about $100 more than the double normal receipts.

Meanwhile, the wolf cubs were used in the lobby of the theater for display purposes.

Distributed Novelties

Boston—Gordon's Central Square and "Beyond the Rocks" which were nearly 100% effective. One was a little envelope with the following on the cover: "You will be surprised—but don't throw this at anybody." Upon opening, the recipient found a little rock and card reading: "This is a lucky stone. Keep it in your pocket. It will carry you safely Beyond the Rocks," etc. According to John P. McConville, Paramount explo-piter, who helped with the stunt, the thought behind the lucky stone was to keep out of the public is superstitions anyhow and would not bend bad luck by throwing the stone away. The second is a similar envelope with the following on its cover: "You will smile when you open this. Follow instructions and you will keep smiling." Inside the envelope was a little card with a safety pin attached. It read: "Use this in case of accident. Gloria Swanson met with a series of accidents, etc."

Coast Brevities

Hollywood—George Siegmann will be seen in "Passions of the Sea." Harri t "Smilin" Pollard.

Nornan Dauyn will start directing a new production shortly.

Jack Conway will direct Herbert Rawlinson in "Another Man's Shoes."

Viola Dana and "June Madness" company are on location at Balboa.

Betty May the new Century lead has been signed on a long term contract by Julius Stern.

Ralph Graves will be seen in "The Jilt," which Irving Cummings is directing for Universal.

Joe Rock has finished "Ali Baba" for Federated Film Exchanges. Billie Rhodes will also be seen in it.

Rapf is making for Warner Bros.

The title of "A Kiss in the Dark," the next Tom Mix production has been changed to "Blood Will Tell."

Bernard McConville will write a story which Emmett Flynn will direct with WilliamParcel as the star.

Estelle Taylor will play the feminine lead in "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," which Gasnier will direct for Preferred Pictures.

Billy Dove and the Metro company filming "Country Love," have returned from location along the Sacramento River.

Monte Banks' first comedy for Federated, produced by Ben Wilson, will be called "Phony But Simple." It is scheduled for early fall release.

Lillian Laselle will be business manager for the Ward Laselle company which is filming "Mind Over Matter." Abe Scholz has been appointed cameraman.

Cecil Spooner, Eddie Barry and Bulle Fitchler, will be seen in "Family Affairs," which Ben Wilson has just completed for Federated. It is the first of a series of 12 comedies.

Production has started under direction of Howard M. Mitchell on "The Great Night," featuring William Russell. Cast includes Wade Boteler,
Henry A. Barrows, Harry Lonsdale,
Lenore Ulman, Blythe Swinyard and Eva Novak in the leading feminine role.

The greatest pictures I ever made will be released to the theatres of America this season.

There are EIGHT of them—EIGHT tremendous box-office attractions.

They have been created with infinite care. They have been produced with casts of superior selection.

I have given them the accumulated skill of my years of experience.

They are the product of the greatest producing organization in the world.

They have been built to meet the box-office demand for big motion pictures—entertainment that fills all the seats, and satisfies.

They are offered to a critical public at a critical time with certainty of success.

I know what I’m talking about because these EIGHT big productions are finished.

P. Commission Ready to See Pictures Rejected but Changed to Meet Requirements

The fact that a picture has been rejected by the Motion Picture Commission of New York does not necessarily mean that the picture is out of the state for all time. The fact has developed as a result of the approval of a number of pictures by that body. The commission has the power to reconsider pictures made in other states and the decision of the New York body is not binding on that commission.

Some say First National's in a helluva fix with its Fall Lineup

Maybe we’re alright—
Maybe we’re all wrong—

Here’s how we’re fixed

We’ve got 12 Knockouts

Most of which are big enough to deserve two weeks or longer in the average first run house.

We’ve got 10 Pippins

That will play a full week in our Franchise holders best theatres.
“Wise” Film men tell us that the market can’t absorb all this big stuff between August 1st and the first of the year—

They say First National ought to hold the big ones up and release them one a month over the whole year. But possibly we have other big ones up our sleeve.
But this goes!

First National will positively release 12 Knockouts and 10 Pippins for its Fall Group.

We figure that big pictures are the one thing our Franchise holders need right now to bring business back with a bang!
That’s the real reason we’re releasing this many in our fall group.

Watch for first detailed announcement in Motion Picture News of August 26th out this week. More details in Motion Picture World, Exhibitors Herald, Exhibitors Trade Review and Film Daily later issues. We can’t tell the whole story all at once.

Coast Brevities
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Hollywood—Forrest Seabury, Engenie Besserer and Leo Willis will appear in "The Stranger's Banquet."

Sir Hall Caine will write the sub-titles for "The Christian."

Filming of "Tess" is completed after 14 weeks of work.

John M. Stahl is cutting "The Dangerous Age."

"Peg O' My Heart" is now in work.

Bert Sternbach, Century casting director, has returned from a three-months' trip abroad.

Jack Mulhall will star in Universal's "Tales of the Fish Patrol." series.

Julian Josephson has completed adaptation of "All the Brothers Were Valiant" for Metro.

"Over Here," directed by Bertram Bracken at Hollywood studios, is nearing completion.

Charles J. Hall's production of "Loyalty" is complete and is being edited and titled.

Century's horse comedy now in production has been titled "Some Hero," with Betty May as feminine lead.

"Omar the Tentmaker" is completed and is being titled and edited by Richard Tully and James Young.

Filming is under way on "The Adventures of Prince Courageous" series of 12 two-reelers, starring Arthur Trumble, five-year-old actor, and directed by Frederick G. Becker at Hollywood studios.

Monte M. Katterjon has returned to Paramount to adapt "His American Wife" written by Hector Turnbull to star Gloria Swanson.

J. K. McDonald Productions have begun "Listening In," fourth of a series of two-reel comedies featuring Johnny Jones and Gertrude Messinger.

Edward Lowe, scenarist, and Frank Atkinson, film editor, have returned to Universal from Vienna where they accompanied Edward Lachenbruch.

Robert Hill will direct Roy Stewart for Universal in a series of lumberjack vehicles which will be made in the vicinity of Fort Bragg, Calif.

Starring Baby Peggy, "Hansel and Gretel," Century's third fairy tale, is finished. Jim Kelly is the father and Blanche Payson, the mother.

Katherine MacDonald's supporting cast in "The Lonely Road" will include Orville Caldwell, Kathleen Kirkham, Eugene Besserer, Vera Lewis, William Conklin and Charles French.

Edward Sloman is directing cutting and titling of "Blind Justice," which will be released in September. Sloman will go to New York to arrange for distribution.

Cutting, titling and editing are progressing on "Gimme" under supervision of Rupert Hughes; and on "Broken Chains" under supervision of Allen Holubar and Paul Bern.

A preview will be held shortly of "The Power of Love," a Perfect Pictures production, in six reels. The exhibition will be made through what is claimed to be a new stereoscopic method. Directed by Nat Deverich, the cast includes Noah Beery, Barbara Bedford, Elliott Sparling, Aileen Manning, Albert Prisco, John Herndon, Philip Sleeman and Frank Kingsley.

Hobart Henley has recalled members of the cast of "The Flirt" for additional scenes at Universal.

Rowland V. Lee has completed "Mixed Faces," starring William Russell for Fox, and is preparing the script for his next production.

David Bader, director of publicity for Century comedies, has left for New York with Julius Stern, and after several days in the metropolis will leave on a national tour of the key cities to work in co-operation with Universal exchanges and theatre owners in the exploitation of Century vehicles.

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his shoe over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

(Special to the Film Daily)

Colorado Tourists Tested Longmont, Colo.—Every motorist riding through this town, the gateway to Estes Park was presented with a warning card reading: "Warning! Go slow and see our town. Go fast and see our jail. Or better still stop and see Bebe Daniels in 'The Speed Girl' Isis theater."

A "My Boy" Ballyhoo

Litchfield, Minn.—"I am looking for 'My Boy,'" With this sign on his back a weather beaten, aged man in tattered clothes and a flowing white beard walked the streets of Litchfield. His pathetic figure caught the interest of his appeal evoked sympathy and countless people stopped him to ask questions. Towards dusk he carried a lighted lantern Unique to see Jackie Coogan's picture.

A Good Turn!

Pomery, O.—This is a story of good will building. A. W. and R. T. Kaspar, run the Electric and have an unflagging supply of power, whereas the power supplying the churches broke down recently owing to the closing of the mines. As soon as the Kaspar's learned of the churches plight they got busy. Despite the fact that the church element had been largely responsible for the local ordinance closing the motion picture theatres on Sundays, the owners of the Electric promptly turned their houses over to the members of the churches to hold religious services on Sunday. The offer was accepted and has built up good will for the theatre of inestimable and lasting value.

Admitted Husbands Free.

Wheeling, W. Va.—For once in his life did or hubby got the best of it. Manager Chas. A. Fuller of the Virginia arranged that every husband attending any matinee performance of "Is Matrimony a Failure?" accompanied by his wife would be admitted free, although the better half had to shell out. This is something like giving away ice in the winter because a small percentage of the husbands could knock off work long enough to see the picture. However, it made a big hit with everybody and caused a lot of talk. In a town of Wheeling's size, any woman wanting to slip in some man not her husband took a chance with her reputation.

Kept Them Guessing

St. Paul, Minn.—The old Raffles stunt has been modernized with the coming of the automobile; and accordingly is found the masked marvel seated in a seven passenger touring car. In the case of the Capitol he took the main streets the week before actually advertising and announcement of the picture began. Local residents were asked to guess "The Masquerader" was, and interest in this picture was inaugurated even before the fans had any idea it was coming. The man with the concealed identity happened to be a tall, well-formed individual, immaculately dressed who might have been expected to be shy of the cameras. The management recorded extra good business as the result.

Stole the Crowd.

Augusta, Kans.—Dare devil ballyhoo artists, performing under the auspices of a shoe polish manufacturing company were doing their tricks in the time that "Smilin' Through" opened its run at the Isis. Manager Johnson seized the opportunity to claim the merits of his picture through heralds to the huge crowd that had assembled to watch the stunts. A banner was used also, far larger than the banner to advertise the shoe polish and it practically "stole the show." Mr. Johnson repaid the kindness, however, because his banner read: "Use This Shoe Polish and You Go 'Smilin' Through' 1922." The ballyhoo was equally successful for the shoe polish company and for the Isis, the only difference being that it didn't cost Isis a cent outside of the banner and heralds.

Tied Up Chamber of Commerce.

Butler, Pa.—The Lyric manageried to get his World's Fair picture "Bought and Paid For" with a "Pay Up" Campaign conducted by the Chamber of Commerce. It was one of the few times an exploitation campaign secured a bona fide endorsement of such a civic organization. Window cards were made up and paid for by the Chamber of Commerce to be displayed in every mercantile window on the main street, reading as follows: "For Paying with the Pay Up Campaign you may pay Peter so Peter can pay Paul. Endorsed by Butler Board of Commerce. Be sure to go in and see it."

Conducted Rhyme Contest.

Detroit—A lot of pep was put into the advertising for "The Bachelor" by the group of the Broadway Strand and the Detroit Journal. The Journal offered prizes of $5, $3, and $2 for the best ads in rhyme submitted during the Phi Gleishman of the Broadway Strand came across with free tickets for the best 25 verses. The contest was to read the Journal want ads and find one which fired his poetic genius. The rhymes could only be written long, the only rule being that the verse had to contain the word "want ad." The prize was a $100 bond and a trip to the Chicago Auto Show for the author of the winning verse. The contest was a great success and many good verses were submitted.

Gland Film
and Other Scientific Productions Coming Here from Abroad
Through the U. F. A.

Professor Steinach's researches in glands controlling internal secretions and reproduction have been recorded in films and will be brought to this country in the fall. The pictures were made under the auspices of the U. F. A. in Germany. It is said to be one of the most costly commercial productions produced.

Their experiences were conducted over a period of a year and a half. The negative was cut into two sections, one purely scientific designed for the medical profession, and the other of a more or less popular nature. Each will have a footage of 1800 feet, each of feature length, and in this country in the fall. Another scientific production which will be finished this year is a film (Continued on Page 3)

Deny Deal for Sales Chief

The report published in these columns that First National is seeking a sales chief to handle its distribution is categorically and emphatically denied by officers of the company. No such move is under contemplation, it is stated. Reports of that nature have been prevalent in the industry in the past few weeks. First National also denied a report published yesterday that J. D. Williams intended sailing for Europe with the Talmadge party.
Newspaper Opinions

"Monte Cristo"—Fox

44th St. Theater

TIRESI.—* The scenes are impressively photographed, the acting is of the highest order,

the important roles are strikingly effective and smooth. Seldom has a picture begun so well and kept its pace so uniformly. But it must be confessed that it reaches its peak when Dantes escapes from his prison. After that, though there is much lavish display in the costumes and settings, and although,

at times, as in some of the preliminary scenes,

Dumas picks up and momentarily regains its cinematic force, the story flags in the main.

HERALD.— A wealth of pictorial and dramatic detail that no power of the illustrator of books could possess or a dramatist achieve in the spoken play.  Was true to historic detail, which gave unusual dramatic force to what would otherwise have been a pedestrian story.

TRIBUNE.— We failed to be thrilled

by the love, hate and vengeance of Edmund

Dumas, or to feel the particular interest of the adventures of the infamous Dantès in his escape from, and capture by, and enclosing device employed by the author. It is admirably directed in its various scenes, but is marred by the occasional slightest achieve of the glass.

One of the few scenes that strikes us as the finest thing about this film drama is its characterization.

We say characterization, not acting stunt they like.

MORNING TELEGRAPH.—Had Alexander Dumas been permitted to occupy a seat for his artistic thought, he would have found little excuse for complaint in the manner in which the William

Fox company handled his original text.

True, there were one or two scenes that were not according to Mr. Dumas's description.

They did not interfere with one's enjoyment of the play, but... * * Belongs on the credit side of the ledger.

MAIL.—* * The early scenes of the play offer much excitement for the camera and the audience that they are much more picturesque and impressive than most of the following.  Glorious pictures, stuff, this greatest of adventure novels, and Emmett J. Flynn, who did the directing, and getting of the best out of the material, impresses us with a little too much precision, and there are considerable long-windedness. But we are hurrying in order to get in as much as possible of the story, there is a few pictorial background for many of the scenes and intimate snapshots of character

appeared.

EVE. WORLD.—* * If you have read the romance, it is well worth seeing. If you haven't read Dumas's—by all means see "Monte Cristo" in film form.

John Gilbert tries hard and, in a way, makes his character in the titular role, but he isn't massive or impressive enough to act it very well. All the other characters, including the several others who

all go to William V. Mong.

GLOBE.—* * Given that the author and its actors, Dumas concerns himself solely with giving with even his enemies.

It is about midway this muddled course that one begins to get tired. * * * A drama whose chief and almost only theme is vengeance. Thus great a deal of that richness of romantic atmosphere with which Dumas's work is packed, has been sacrificed. John Gilbert, in the title role, is most comparatively

no character. "Sea

Christ" by all means, only leave at home all your preconceived ideas of the subject.

POST.—* * Lent itself readily to the screen, and after the first act * * * it moved easily and logically to its new happy ending.

This is a litter little good since so much money had been spared in the production, and, as before remarked, the players were all good.

 * Screen acting is an art, and Mr. Gilbert is a master of it.

It was a film of rare pictorial beauty, in fact it is doubtful if any previous films excel it in that respect. And at times it rises to such genuine excellence, that it must be admitted that those moments are comparatively few when they are seen. A glittering tale he had to work with.

At best it is only constantly interesting and not the face sweeping movie you are bound to expect.

EVE. TELEGRAM.—If you want real thrills * * * watch Edmund Dantes, the hero.

* * * There are pictures of great beauty.

To be sure, the film is not perfect.

There are moments to fail to be impressive, but these are merely passing incidents and can easily be cut out. John Gilbert is Edmund Dantes, and swings through the film with the gait of a real hero.

JOURNAL.—If you wish to renew your youth, for two hours at least, see * * * "Monte Cristo" * * * In this production there has been woven all the wealth of romance, adventure and panache that has made of the elder Dumas's novel an impossible work. Ignorant, and that were he still living, could hardly ask for a more marvellous presentation. John

Gilbert was given the role of Edmund

Dantes, and it was a wise choice.

At Broadway Theaters

Capitol

44th Street

"Monte Cristo," a version of Dumas' "The Count of Monte Cristo," is the title of the entire program. There is an overture, but the rest of the time is taken up by the feature.

Rialto

"Nice People" is the principal attraction and other film numbers include Larry Semon in "Golliwog" and the usual magazine, Rieger's "Semiramis," played by the orchestra; Rieser's "Classical Concert," and from Higg's "Pearlbeard," sung by Ruggiero Baltarico and Giuseppe Gironnati, tenor and baritone respectively, and Sarasate's "Fantaisie" offered by Leonard Bovall on the violin make up the musical program.

Selected Selections from Verdi's "Il Trovatore" are rendered by the orchestra for the overture, with Kitty McLaughlin, soprano, and Fernando Guarini, baritone. The Topical Review is next and then there is the vocal portrayal of the feature, sung by another baritone, Harrison Brockbanks. Guy Carson has "The Winner" in "The Farmer's Wife" and large number on the program and the comedy relief is furnished by Earl Howard comedy, "Fresh Fish."

At Other Houses

Programs at other theaters are virtually unchanged. John Barrymore in "Sherlock Holmes" is still at the Criterion, "Forget Me Not" at the Criterion, "Human Hearts" at the Central, Rosolphi's in "Blond and Bold" at the Rivoli, and "The Prisoner of Zenda" at the Astor.

Troy Company Chartered

(St. Louis—The Mid West Prod. Co. has been organized to produce at Creve Coeur Lake, a suburban amusement resort. The United Railway Co., which owns the park and John H. Meyers state they have agreed to build a large studio. Leon D. Coyle will be in charge of production, Aaron Fineschriber will be president and Louis K. Ansell, secretary-treasurer, Fineschriber and Ansell own the Variety theater.

Joint Arbitration in Washington

(At the Capitol)

Washington—Changes in policy and officers were made by the Film Board of Trade, at a meeting when R. Clinton Robin, Pathé, was unanimously elected president. The other officers elected were, Walter Price, Goldwyn, vice president; Eugene Wilson, Vitagraph, treasurer; and C. M. Thomas, Strand Film, secretary. It was voted to continue the services of Charles E. Wagner as corresponding secretary.

The first step to develop harmony will be the establishment of a grievance committee composed of three exchanges and three exhibitors, one appointed by the Virginia Exhibitors League, one by the Maryland Exhibitors League, and one representing the District. The exchanges will be represented on this committee by Clinton Robin, Pathé; Joseph S. Hebrew, Fox; and C. M. Thomas, Strand Film.

Motion Pictures Can Be Better Advertised

This is not a criticism of the advertising that has been done. Much of it is very good, but progress should not halt and much progress may still be made. It has become a by-word that motion picture advertising is bad, but they're not. It has become a by-word that motion picture advertising is bad, but it's not. It has become a by-word that the motion pictures are corrupt, but they're not. It has become a by-word that the motion pictures are not going to be successful, but they're not. How are these popular misconceptions to be accounted for? Mainly by some super-advertising. Who might conceivably inspire and direct such super advertising? Certainly not a beginner or an experimenter. Certainly not a man utterly out of touch with the industry, no matter how great his experience. And most certainly this necessary super-advertising is not going to be done by a man entirely steeped in the customs, traditions and taboos of the industry.

The writer of this message to some big motion picture executive is none of these things. He is writing this message because he happens to be perhaps the one man who has the peculiar combination of talents and experiences that the creator of this new super-advertising will possess.

He is first of all, a sound advertising man of wide experience; successful in his work; well known and highly regarded in the advertising fraternity. He is now directing advertising for one of the largest advertisers in his country.

He is also (and this completes the rare, the unusual combination) a writer of popular fiction that has been successfully transferred to the screen.

And please note that he has never claimed that his work was ruined in the process.

He is a man widely read in the literature, of all ages and all nations, a man up to the minute in the literatures today.

He is an enthusiastic lover of motion pictures and believes in their great future. Surely such a man and only such a man is qualified to direct and super-advertising that some fiction picture organization needs.

This man seeks that work first and foremost because the work he would most like to do. He is not interested in a position or ever likely to be.

He wishes to meet you and assures you that your letter will be regarded as confidential.

Local Combine

Exhibitors Rallying to Fight First-Run Situation—Action Aimed at Big Circuits

A number of well-known local exhibitors have formed a booking combination to fight the big circuits' hold on first-runs. There are about seven men involved but they are probably only the nucleus of what is hoped will be a strong organization, capable of virtual domination of the market. The combined group will control to secure action of the kind it wants from exchanges. The complaint is that the big circuits get the cream of the market because they are in a position to offer the distributor a block of days that he cannot match in justice. The result is that the exhibitors who run one, two or a chain of theaters has to follow the circuit and pay high rentals to get the product.

The apparent aim of the embryonic organization is to offer the exchanges a total number of booking days on our picture or a series of pictures. After the product is secured the members can arrange the dates on a pre-arranged basis.

Ban Rescinded

ingle in England Over Foreign Acors Seems Settled—Ann Forrest

Complications arising from British immigration laws which prevent the portation of labor which Englishmen are capable of filling, and which have been cited in cases of screen formers, have apparently been cleared.

It was learned by the local Fox in advices from London that A. Forrest, who went to the British and to a meeting in Chicago, has been allowed in, with the issuing order which originally ailed her having been rescinded.

The authorities and Fox representatives were debating the matter, as Forrest was not permitted to land and the fear of the ban is to mean to the industry that he will be no difficulties of this kind in the future. Had the officials persisted in their policy of exclusion planned for Britain by American producers would have been headed if not entirely eliminated.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Watch the Timetables

Salt Lake City—Kenneth Renaud, exploitation manager of the Glendenning, had learned of the injury to Mary Miles Minter and were aware of the fact that a train carrying her was due to pass through the city. Consequently, they hit upon an idea to boost “South of Suva” in which she is starred. With considerable care they watched the timetables and when the locomotive pulling the cars were still three hours away, they tipped the newspapermen off. Reporters were on the job and the next day, notice that the length as well as photographs appeared in the dailies. Casually, meanwhile, Glendenning let them know that one car would be with the patrons wended their ways to the box office. Of course, injurious accidents are daily deplored, but sometimes a fellow finds some way of getting a bit of good out of one.

A Puzzle for Children

Minneapolis—A picture puzzle appeared in the Daily News in connection with “Fool’s Paradise” proved to be a clever bit of exploitation. It was as follows:

A boy with a dotted line traveling from his eye to a window sill. Following the window sill was a buzzing bee. Then followed the letters “de.” Next a picture of one of the four mills famous by Minneapolis. Following that was the sketch of two court jesters. Then came a pair of dice. It was simple, for the line of sight stood for Ce (see); the window sill for sill (Cil); the letters “de” stood for themselves; the picture of the mills arranged in pairs; the two jesters stood for Fool’s and the dice, there being two in number, stood for a Pair of dice. (Paradise.)

The Odor of Mint Leaves

Hutchinson, Kan.—When Earl Haas, manager of the Midland played “The Lotus Eater” he sent around small tags to his mailing list with this copy:

"In Lotus land they eat leaves like these to win soothing peace and dreamy delights. John Barrymore inspired."

To each card he mailed out he attached a spray of mint. The leaves, at the time of sending were just off the ice and their odor was a certain incentive to open the package. The cards and flowers were supplied by a local florist who was anxious to advertise his business in this way and all Manager Haas had to pay for this stunt, which increased box office receipts considerably, was the cost of mailing or sending.

Linked Up With Baby Show

Scottsbluff, Neb.—The Orpheum got on page one of the Platte Valley Daily News for three weeks by looking up “The Bachelor Daddy” with a baby show. The details of this campaign were handled by Rick Raffety, who is the new manager of the theatre and the National Society for Better Babies together. Tom Meighan was publicized as sponsoring the stunt. The affair was made pleasant to all by eliminating many long-drawn-out features usually found in baby shows. There were no special preparations nor rehearsing. Clothes had nothing to do with it as the youngsters appeared quite in the baby fashion. The babies of one and two years old were featured. On Tuesday night came the older children up to five. Kicketson arranged for the printing of the pictures of all babies entered in the contest in “America’s Future,” the seven-weeks magazine for the National Society for Better Babies, while the theatre furnished cash prizes to the winners.

An Attractive Lobby

Lansing, Mich.—Among the lobby decorations that have come to hand is a new one that was arranged by Manager Ellsworth Hamer of the Strand. For “Smills’ Through.” A wax bust of Norma Talmadge in the starring role was the centerpiece. It stood in a glass case, which such as one sees in summer houses on the French Riviera. At the right a gilded stairway led to the balcony of the theatre but was closed to allow the display to have the space it needed. The stone stairway before the waxed figure was decorated with potted plants and shrubs. Local merchants cooperated by furnishing play and furniture necessary for this layout and received recognition in the program. It made such a farce that it helped the box office.

Distributed Magazines

Twin Falls, Id.—During the run of “South of Suva” at the Idaho, J. E. Madsen, the manager, advertised to the every woman and girl a present worth more than the price of admission” would be given upon the purchase of a ticket. Of course, the women were skeptical, but very many more were curious and they came to see what it all was about. A tie up included cards and a 20-cent offer with the Photoplay Magazine and a copy was given to each member of the generalissimo’s staff. The advertising of this publication would stimulate interest in pictures justifies Madsen’s claim that it was constructive advertising.

They Became Detectives

Brooklyn, Mass.—Manager Joe Cahn got the idea of reviving “Raffles” idea, using a girl as the lure when “Sonny” opened. The “Enterprise” sponsored the chase, opening the campaign with a two-column article and a photograph of the mysterious girl labeled: “You are Sonny’s girl and the Enterprise offers Fifty Dollars Reward for your Capture.” Local residents fell hard for the stunt. It was promised that as soon as the girl was identified, she would admit her part and accompany her car to the show, where the reward would be paid. Several good natured mistakes occurred adding to the excitement, and co-operated in lending the literal name to the girl. The stunt was finally caught by the Enterprise and the First National at the Strand had both won enough new business to justify Manager Cahn’s showmanship. The campaign reported a net catch of 250 inches of free publicity.

Essay Contest Got Space

Syracuse, N. Y.—The Strand gobbled nearly a thousand lines of free publicity in the Syracuse Herald with an essay contest on “Our Leading Citizens.” Harry L. Rossey, Paramount exploiter from Buffalo, the newspaper was sold to sponsor the contest. The Herald asked its readers proposing some local light as the “leading citizen” of the town. The winner received one of the contest essays at $10 each in cash prizes. The contest ran six days of which were given over to the publication of typical letters, the first day for the announcements. The idea of the contest hit home with every reader. The American public is extreme, the publication was turned over to honors and distinction, and Syracuse proved no exception. The whole town watched the Herald for the first name was singled out for the headlines.

One Ticket for Family

La Crosse, Wis.—F. L. Koppleberger, general manager of the La Crosse and his press agent, Bill Freiss evolved a plan that boosted business during the dull season with the result that the La Crosse is showing splendid returns. It started with the run of “The Hunchback.” The advertisement read: “Have you been thinking of going more or less than Family Night. Special admission rates of 55 cents at the Rivoli and 28 cents at the Majestic, including family passes in order for the entire family, including father, mother and the children. The idea was extensively advertised and on the second week of the plan a gentleman and lady presented themselves at the box office having in tow what Koppleberger declared looked like a Sunday School picnic. He was father, mother and eleven children and they all got in for 35 cents. The theatre lost money on this but the family consented to be photographed for advertising and exploitation purposes. The whole idea built up business at the Majestic and Rivoli solidly.

Stone Signs with Paramount

Lewis S. Stone has signed a contract with Paramount to become permanently identified with the stock company. He fills the part of Dan B. Daniels in William de Mille’s next picture, originally titled “Notoriety.”

Harry Gibbs of the Fox field forces will be permanently located in the New York office during the coming fall and winter.

J. D. Williams Transfers Interest
In The Hope, Dallas, to Jesse H.
Jones
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Dallas—The Hope Theater closed last Saturday night for four weeks.

During this period a new refrigerat-ing plant will be installed.

This theater was built by Jesse
H. Jones, of Houston, and was sub-leased to the J. D. Williams Amusement Co., of which J. D. Williams, Jules E. Brulatour and Tom Brula-tour are directors. The impression prevalent in film circles here at the time the theater was being built was that its construction was undertaken because of the tight hold of Southern Enterprises, Inc., on the first-run situation here. The house opened on April 26.

F. P. Earnings Drop
Six Months’ Profits $1,000,000 Under Totals for Same Period in 1921
Famous Players-Lasky, in its consolidated statement which includes the earnings of subsidiary companies owned 90% or more reports for the six months ended July 1, 1922, net operating profits of $2,018,337.37 after deducting all charges and reserves for Federal income and other taxes.

For payment of dividends on the preferred stock, the above earnings are at the annual rate of $15.93 on the 206,849 shares of common stock outstanding in the hands of the public.

The earnings for the same period of 1921 totaled $2,770,600. At the same time, these figures represented an average earning power of $26.04 on the 206,849 shares of common stock outstanding in the hands of the public.

Control Bellingham Houses
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Bellingham, Wash.—Jensen & Von Herberg, who bought out Watch Quinby’s Liberty and Rialto here last spring, have sold their interests to a company formed by Fred Walton, W. S. Quinby and William Sothern. The new owners will close the Rialto. This merger gives them control in Bellingham. They are renannouncing the American, the largest house, which will reopen this fall.

Ricau Organizing
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Paris—Denis Ricau, formerly an executive in charge of Pathé Consortium has practically completed his return from Europe. He is organizing a large corporation, financed chiefly in France, and will make a series of three or four very large pictures each year. He expects to return early in October for America to discuss releasing arrangements for his product.

Negotiations have been concluded by which Ricau will secure one of the best known producers of France to have charge of production, in a supervisory capacity.
Coast Brevities
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Hollywood—The title of the Reginald Barker production "Timber," has been changed to "Hearts Afame."

Paul Powell will direct Agnes Ayres in "A Daughter of Luxury."

Katherine MacDonald's next picture will be "Heroes and Husbands."

Mrs. Jack Coogan has undergone an operation which will keep her at home for several weeks.

"Enter Madame," starring Clara Kimball Young and directed by Wallace Worsley, is finished.

Gareth Hughes will return to his home city, Llanelli, Wales upon the completion of "The Christian."

Mabel Trunnelle, remembered as leading woman in the early days of the old Edison company is a member of the cast of "Singled Wings."

Earl T. Montgomery, has filed a petition for bankruptcy, listing no assets with liabilities at $6,022.25 including $1,972.13 government income tax.

Edith Roberts will appear in "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" instead of Enid Bennett. This will be a Gansier production for the Albert Lichtman Corp.

It is understood that the operation of the branch house has not been very successful. Williams placed T. H. Edick of Australia, in charge of the branch house, while Tom Brutauor, brother of Jules E., was house treasurer. Jules E. Brutauor is generally understood to have financed the greater portion of the project.

It was stated for J. D. Williams yesterday that he had transferred his interest in the house and its lease to Jesse H. Jones, the builder, and that Williams would have little or no say in the management of the theater from now on. Jones, it was said, live in Houston and can more adequately manage the theater from that comparative near-by point than Williams can through a representative while the former is so far away from the actual operations.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

Curious and Furs Helped

Indianaapolis—Norman H. Morsey, local branch manager for Pathe, co-operates very well with the Circle in letting the public know about “Nanook of the North.” With the aid of Eskimo curios brought down from the North by Producer Phalberi, the theater lobby was transformed into an Eskimo village. There was a realistic igloo. The Indian apache, Red Fox Club furnished a large quantity of wild game specimens, and furs were much in evidence. This display attracted crowds from the start.

A tie-up with L. S. Ayres & Co., the largest dry goods store in the city, which loaned its entire stock of its fur department, gave added force to the newspaper advertising. It was the store’s promotion for the coming season. Its prettiest mannikins, attired in these furs, extended their parade to the theater lobby and foyer. Endorsements from officials were also of value.

Free Gas!

Fort Morgan, Colo.—Free gasoline between shows, when W. L. Hartman, manager of the Cover played “The Ruling Passion.” And here is what Hartman says about his stunt:

“For five days before the showing of ‘The Ruling Passion’ I ran teaser ads in the newspapers calling attention to the ‘Free Gas’ at the Cover theater on the nights the picture was to be shown. I arranged with the Sinclair Filling Stations at Fort Morgan to furnish the gasoline free to me on the strength of the good advertising that might result. The display in front of the theater was worth the price of the gasoline the stations would give away. We gave a ticket entitling the holder to one gallon of gas free to every fifth ticket purchaser at the theater box-office. In all we gave away 100 gallons of gas.

“My stunt was the talk of the town ahead of the opening, as well as during the days of the showing. Everybody was curious to know how I was to give out this free gas. I said nothing about a ticket. I must say that the stunt increased attendance at the theater for two of the hottest nights we had all this summer. The fine part of the stunt was that it did not cost me a cent. All I gave was some paint, old discarded compo boards, and two hours hard work. The center piece in the lobby was built of compo board. It is a shadow box, the interior draped with heavy green plush which was loaned from two of the doors in the theater. With two 100 watt lights in the top of this display I made a very pretty effect at night.

“The answer is that the entire layout stopped them, and ushered them up on to the ticket window—all in a very satisfactory manner from a box-office standpoint.”

Running Resemblance Contest

Los Angeles—The Gore Brothers, Ranimsh and Sol Leaser West Coast Exhibitors are running the Baby Peggy Contest, which originated with Sid Grauman and was tried successfully at the latter’s Million Dollar theater to find a little girl’s double. Fond mothers all over the country are sending in pictures of little girls in the hope that one of them may resemble Peggy and not only win the prize but also the chance to make a debut on the screen in Century Comedies. Over 75 neighborhood houses comprise the chain.

“Thrill-ometer” Is New One

Portland, Ill.—A “thrill-ometer,” installed in the lobby of the Madison is the latest ingenious admirer that theater added to its list of cut outs and window displays. TheIt was installed during the run of “One Clear Call” and found instant use. As the feature picture was run after the high points reached, the “thrill-ometer” recorded them by mercury rises. The operator, who manipulated the mechanism with hand and watched the feature picture with one eye, had the thrill-ometer coincide with the picture, the mercury touching both eyes, thrills or sentiment at the same moment that these motions were reacted on the screen. The passenger watching in the lobby the thrill-meter was a sure-fire salesman.

Officer Did His Duty

Syracuse, N. Y.—When “The Loves of Pharaoh” played at Keith’s, all four corners of an important installation were provided with a Berendert arrangement that would ordinarily bring prompt interference from the police. Fred Greene had been on the job, however, and arranged with the police to permit the completion unmolested. When the signs had been marked on the pavement, the long arm of the law suddenly presented itself in the form of an indignant officer. He saw to it that one of the house staff took a mop, pail of water and some turpentine with which to remove the offending letters.

Meanwhile, a good-sized crowd witnessed the painting and removing on the important thoroughfare. Not only did this go over as a ballyhoo, but the newspaper publicity was obtained. Three papers ran prominent stories and Greene also arranged a tie-up with the Postal Telegraph Co. A message from Ernest Lubitsch, director of the production was faked, and cablegram stills together with the story was sent to the newspapers about the size of a one-sheet displayed in the telegraph company’s window.

Celebrated Buys C. B. C. Film

Celebrated Players of Milwaukee have purchased “More to Be Pitied” for Wisconsin.

Process “Lab” Ready

The emulation and protecting it from scorching with Peggy oil from the projection machine. A special demonstration was recently given to the technical men of the trade by the company before and after processing. The additional layer of celluloid did not preclude a good screening. Several of the experts present claimed that it brightened the red and gave a better screening.

The secret of the process lies in the solution that is used to coat the emulation. The print is run through a machine that turns out an even coat of liquid celluloid across its surface. From this machine the ribbon passes on to a drying drum and in several minutes it is wound back to its original spool.

Other advantages claimed for the process are that it will prevent gumming of the projection machine, increase the strength of the film and allow the use of sepias which at present require specificity for oil, are not used with much success. The sprocket holes are also said to be slightly enforced by the deposit of the additional layer.

The Ultra Film Proctor Co., Inc., has imported their process from Germany, but has been required to purchase a basic patent already issued in this country for a coating process. The original machinery and drying drums were also brought over from the other side. Additional units will however be made in this country after the models now in operation. The company has adopted the trade name “Duratize” for their process. Offices have been established in the film district and the president of the company is Allan A. Lownes.

Another Complaint

The Commission Files Charge Against American Film—Old and New Titles Involved
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington — The Federal Trade Commission yesterday issued a complaint against the American Film Co. of Chicago. The respondent was ordered to cease and desist from the practice of using the words "American Film" or "American Films" in connection with the exhibition of any film which is not an American production.

The case against the company involves the question of unfair methods of competition in the leasing and selling of old and second class films, under different titles than originally presented to the public, without prior designation and explanation to exhibitors to whom such films were leased or sold, although the courts for such films called for first or new photo plays.

This practice in the complaint states, had the tendency to deceive and mislead the exhibitors and their patrons into the belief that these new-named pictures were not previously displayed.

Leon d'Usseau Leaves

Con d'Usseau, Eastern scenario writer for Universal is on his way to the west coast with a number of stories universal has purchased. The scripts be used for the bulk of that company's 1922-1923 product.

Baum Off on Selling Trip

Louis Baum has been made a vice president of Equity, and is now on a west to east territory on that line. The Majestic, which has been bought by Australian Films Ltd., and for Argentinia, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, and Ecuador, by Jacob H. Amsman.

Chicago Faces Music Strike
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago — The outcome of a conference between theater owners and representatives of the Chicago Federation of Musicians may determine whether the musicians take a strike or not.

Members of the federation employing picture theaters have already indicated unanimously not to accept any cut and to demand a guarantee of 8 weeks work a year. Managers of large houses have given notice of a 1% wage cut, with no guarantee of employment. The loop owners are threatening a wage cut of $7 per week, with a $2 work guarantee, or a $5 week, but with a guarantee of nine months work per year.

Loew Sailing on Berengaria
London — Marcus Loew has booked passage for America on the Berengaria.

Sunday Issue Up in Memphis
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Memphis — As a result of the Laymen's Committee of the Protestant Churches, which began the arrest of Charles A. McElroy and Lloyd DeRath, managers of Consolidated Enter. Theaters and Pantages, respectively, a "blue Sunday" battle is under way. Due to the fact that the churchmen were unable to produce witnesses in court on the day scheduled for the hearing, the cases against the exhibitors have been indefinitely postponed, and other theater men continue to show films on the Sabbath. The law invoked against McElroy and DeRath was passed in 1833 and provides for a fine of from $5 to $10. Efforts to unearth other statutes are under way and if these are not found, new legislation of a "blue" character will be urged.

Change Planned at Universal

It is understood that a change in the field force of Universal is planned. George Levine, at present short subject sales manager, is expected to assume charge of the Chicago exchange and there is some talk that Herman, present at a district manager, will assume new duties in New York.

Saxe with C. B. C.

Sam Saxe is now handling the sales department for C. B. C. He has just sold Wisconsin on the six C. B. C. features, the first of which is "More To Be Fitted" to the Celebrated Players.

Georgia Body Takes No Action
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Atlanta — When the Georgia Legislature adjourned, no action had been taken on the censorship and luxury tax bills, against which the Georgia Amusement Protective Association has been waging a battle.

Goldwyn Holds Three Italian Films

Goldwyn still holds for release three Italian pictures contracted for with Italian producers through Europe. They are "The Ship," "Beatrice" and "The Son of Madame Sans Gene," produced by the U. C. L. "Theodora," the first of the group, has already been released. At Goldwyn is a statement yesterday that no plans had been made for distribution. It was added that the pictures are still held by the company, that they are in need of further editing and that no decision has been made as to whether or not they would be included in next year's schedule.
Reject Offer

Announcement was also made that the creditors favored the quashing of the receiving order issued by Mr. Justice McMillan at Covington and it is understood that an application is to be made to the court to set aside the bankruptcy order.

Considerable optimism was in evidence at the creditors’ meeting. An Allen Theater official declared, following the meeting, that the situation was considered as having cleared and that immediate prospects appeared bright for the company.

Labor Trouble in Chicago

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—An effort made to put 10 non-union men to work at a new construction at McVicker’s theater caused others on the job to quit. When the non-union men arrived there, the others began to throw brick and brickle and the matter was finally settled when the non-union men were withdrawn.

McWilliams Is Chosen President

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Milwaukee—F. J. McWilliams of Milwaukee has been elected president of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin succeeding Joseph G. Rhode. Over 150 exhibitors attended the convention. Other officers elected were Charles Gustin, vice president; Joseph Winninger, treasurer; J. H. Silliman, recording secretary and Steve Bauer, sergeant-at-arms.

Adler Asked to Resign

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—F. O. Adler, recently-elected president of the M. P. T. O. of Southern California, was asked to resign from the new board of directors. The drastic action was reported due to his having involved an obsolete law practice and activities in the same house, against an opposition theater.

Says Exhibitors Back Board

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Detroit—H. M. Richey, manager of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan, says that the members of the organization will support the action of the board of directors in protesting against an alleged abrogation by that concern of a contract with the Broadway Strand. Because of differences caused by this so-called Kinsky houses and George W. Trendle withdrew from the board, and the matter is to be left before the entire body.

Will Produce 18 Pictures

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Columbus, O.—Eighteen pictures will be made this year by the J. Statter Deane Producing Co. of Columbus. Of these, 16 pictures, which James Fitzgerald will supervise, and 12 two reel comedies. In the latter, Billy Gilbert and Avis Leslie will be featured. The studio arrangements are now being made at Buckeye Lake which is near here and the camera is to arrive in two weeks. Filming and one feature there, after which he will move his company to Miami for the winter.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Free List Was Surprise

Cumberland, Md.—After running a puzzle contest for “Find the Woman” in a tie-up with the Daily News, Manager Slot of the Strand came to the office with a surprise. A puzzle of 200 words in length was cut into pieces and each part was used in a cooperative ad of some merchant’s. Of $5, $1 and $2 respectively were given away at the offices of the publication, but Slot hit upon a better idea—he gave free tickets to all those who had taken part in the competition. As usual, practically every free pasteboard was accompanied by one or more paid admissions. It was a surprise and built up good will.

A Many-Angled Campaign

Denver, Co.—The Isis was the center of a many-sided campaign for “My Wild Irish Rose” when it played there. M. Witmark and Sons, music publishers, through their district organization, lent effective aid in the general program, which included many novel stunts. Carnations, dyed green, were used as souvenirs; a police quartette appeared at all performances and rendered Irish melodies, and the Denver Post entered the spirit of the thing with a “freebie contest,” challenging the city for Mickey Daniels, the speckled kid of the production. The Post also broadcasted the song of the same name in vocal solo, and announced the picture. Witmark and Sons were successful in inducing bands at various municipal concerts to include this sweet old song in the programs. Not many were equal to go uninformed that it was Irish week at the Isis.

Tied Up With Balloon Meet

Sandusky, O.—While the international balloon contest was being conducted in Geneva, Manager George Schade of the house hearing his name conducted a race all his own. For “The Invisible Fear” he used toy balloons that were sent up, some carrying passes, and most of these were redeemed later on at the box office. His big surprise came several days later when he received a letter from a woman of Youngstown, enclosing one of these passes. It was evident that the balloon had actually covered the distance of 125 miles and she claimed her rights under the contest. As it was manifestly unprofitable to travel 125 miles to get a pass, Schade sent her a new dollar bill with a letter advising her to spend it in a film house in her own town. Although Schade’s theater did not benefit directly by the aeronautical flight he claims that the newspaper publicity given this incident, was worth the slight investment.

Film Version Of Successful Stage Play Is Good Dramatic Offering

Guy Bates Post in
"THE MASQUERADER"
Richard Walton Tully—Asso, First Nat'l Pict.
DIRECTOR ..........................James Young AUTHORS:...Katherine Cecil Thurston, the novel;
John Hunter Booth, the play
SCENARIO BY .........................Not credited
CAMERAMAN ........................George Benoit
AS A WHOLE......Will best suit those who like dual role stories and plenty of dramatic acting STORY......From the stage play; too implausible as told here but a good screen vehicle nevertheless DIRECTION......A good production; permits star to overact and does not demand enough distintinction between his two roles
PHOTOGRAPHY ......................... Good
LIGHTINGS .......................... Usually all right STAR..............Does very fine work at times but is pompous and makes both his characters too much alike SUPPORT......An adequate but ordinary cast on the whole; includes Edward M. Kimball, Ruth

EXTERIORS .......................... Few
INTERIORS .......................... Suitable
DETAIL ..................................Suffices
CHARACTER OF STORY......Member of Parliament changes places with reporter who assumes his identity even after the former dies, then marries the other man's wife
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 7,835 feet
"The Masquerader" is undoubtedly the best known of all stories dealing with dual roles, although similar themes have been used time and again for screen vehicles. However, Richard Walton Tully's selection of the Booth stage play for Guy Bates Post's screen debut was a wise one and a fully appropriate one since Post scored a success in the same role in the stage version.

A Title That Can Be Made To Work For You

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In view of the success of "The Masquerader" as a stage play, it is probable that the film version will prove to be a good drawing card, also more particularly since it includes Guy Bates Post, the star of the original. Exhibitors who know their patrons favor dramatic entertainment will do well to show them "The Masquerader," and the title is one that will draw if properly exploited.

Tell them it is the first appearance of Guy Bates Post in pictures and let them know he plays a dual role—this for the benefit of those not familiar with the story. Catchlines of the usual order should attract but above all, display the title prominently and do your best to cash in on its drawing power and the star.
Too Much Money Expended For Elaborate Production of Poor Story

Gloria Swanson in "HER GILDED CAGE"
Paramount

DIRECTOR ......................... Sam Wood
AUTHOR ......................... Ann Nichols
SCENARIO BY......Elmer Harris and Percy Heath
CAMERAMAN ...................... Alfred Gilks
AS A WHOLE......Extravagant production, lavish settings and bizarre effects provide a picture with pictorial appeal only STORY......Weak and unconvincing situations that would have amounted to nothing but for the money spent to picturize them DIRECTION......After the fashion of Cecil DeMille, elaborate plus, wasted too much money on production
PHOTOGRAPHY ................... Excellent
STAR......Does some good acting in opening reels but is artificial as the actress named after a perfume SUPPORT......Satisfactory; cast includes Walter Hiers, David Powell, Harrison Ford, Anne Cornwall and Chas. Stevenson
EXTERIORS ...................... Not many INTERIORS ....................... Very elaborate
DETAIL ......................... Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY......French dancer "suffers" the "past" composed by her press agent in order to secure the money, such fame will bring, to pay for operation to cure sister
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......6,338 feet

Undoubtedly there is a big market for just such pictures as "Her Gilded Cage," Gloria Swanson's latest offering, a lavish and extravagant production that offers little excuse for the money expended upon it in the story it tells. But as long as it pleases the eye and shows every sign of having cost real dollars to produce, probably everybody will be happy—that is if it brings back the dollars. There are many picturegoers who favor extravagance and display in preference to a good story that contains some common sense but there is a bigger majority who demand the latter type of picture.

The Paramount scenario department seems to be of the impression that Gloria Swanson will get over in any kind of a story so long as it allows them to dress her up in fancy head-dress and gorgeous gowns, all of which doesn't speak very highly for what they think of her acting ability. In the early reels of "Her Gilded Cage," the star appears in ordinary attire and is much more convincing and pleasing than in the scenes where she is "shown off." In these sequences she is good to look at, no doubt about that, but artificial.

The story is a rather spineless one with situations that are very unconvincing. The old, old angle of the lover believing the worst of the woman he loves, without giving her a chance to explain, is one that the remainder of the story hinges upon with subsequent situations equally far-fetched. Another is that in which a press agent publishes a notorious "past" for the dancer in order to gain fame for her and the intelligence of the public is once more insulted as accepting the publicity.

Sam Wood used plenty of elaborate settings that will attract the eye. One, a party given by Harrison Ford in honor of "Fleur D'Amour," Miss Swanson, a huge gilded cage encloses the table at which the guests are seated. It is indeed an extravagant party. Throughout, Wood hasn't spared expense in making the picture lavish.

Story: Suzanne comes to America where her press agent bills her as "the favorite of King Fernando," and all the notoriety that goes with it. How Suzanne suffers the loss of her lover who believes these things, in order to get money that will cure her crippled sister, but eventually wins back his love, is told in much more detail.

Sure to Please Those Who Are Satisfied With Visual Appeal

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who know Gloria Swanson to be a good bet as far as the box office is concerned will be sure to satisfy their patrons with her latest picture if their patrons liked her past productions. You can promise a lavish production and plenty of elaborate display in "Her Gilded Cage." The title hints of just that kind of a picture and you won't disappoint them if that is what they came in for.

The title suggests an ideal for exploitation if you care to go to the expense. A large gilded cage in the lobby with a pretty young woman dressed after the fashion of the star would certainly draw a crowd and if you display stills they should be sufficiently interested to come inside for the picture.
Interesting and Fairly Spectacular Version of Mark Twain Story

"THE PRINCE AND THE PAUPER"
R. L. Giffen

DIRECTOR .................. Alexander Kardo
AUTHOR ..................... Mark Twain
SCENARIO BY .................. Not credited
CAMERAMAN .................. Not credited

AS A WHOLE......An enjoyable rendition of the famous Twain story; carries especially strong appeal for juvenile audiences

STORY...........Interestingly told and occasionally good spectacular bits; retains pleasing humor of the author

DIRECTION ......Good as far as telling the story is concerned but faulty in some angles of production

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. Usually good LIGHTINGS ................... Varying

PLAYERS......Tibi Lubin an interesting juvenile performer; handles dual role capably; others quite subordinate to boy star; foreign players whose names mean nothing here

EXTERIORS............Fair; should have been used more extensively

INTERIORS ............Appropriate

DETAIL............Apparently well taken care of

CHARACTER OF STORY.............Heir to throne changes place with boy beggar and nearly loses his throne as a result

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...........6,522 feet

It is somewhat of a coincidence that the identical criticism given the Paramount production of the Mark Twain story, released in 1915, should apply exactly in the same light to the Austrian version showing at the Capitol the past week. A review of the Hugh Ford picture, in which Marguerite Clark played the dual roles, mentioned that the director had not taken advantage of opportunities afforded by the story for exterior shots. The same error has been made in this production. Instead of using picturesque natural backgrounds, studio sets have been employed, with the result that considerable realism has been destroyed and the picture made quite "stagey."

This is not to say that some of the sets are not commendable. The pageant and coronation scenes are nicely done and the mob shots, for the most part, carefully handled. The story is interestingly told and the director has deftly included much of the humor intended by the author, although he has not been quite as successful in applying the human touches. The continuity is good and on the whole the presentation apparently tries to be quite worthy of name and you could not ask a better bit of juvenile entertainment than Mark Twain's pseudo-historic novel, "The Prince and the Pauper."

The cast of players is not known to American audiences but Tibi Lubin, an interesting and capable youngster, is likely to win considerable admiration for his dual portrayal. The supporting company is adequate but the remaining parts are all very much subordinated to the dual roles of the boy player.

Story: Tom Canty, a beggar's boy, dreams of being a prince. One day he wanders into the Royal Gardens and is greeted by the Prince who longs for a glimpse of the outside world. The two look exactly alike so the Prince begs Tom to change places with him a while. While Tom tries to convince those in the palace that he is not the Prince, the real Prince meets with hardship at the hands of Tom's father, who thinks the boy is his son. Henry VIII dies and the Prince tries to get to London before the beggar boy is crowned King of England. His adventures and sufferings trying to reach London, and the worries Tom, whom the people believe is their Prince gone insane, are told in interesting sequences which finally lead to the Prince's arriving in time for the coronation when he names Tom as his ward.

Should Appeal to Matinee Crowds Especially

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

For a certain class of patronage "The Prince and the Pauper" should provide a pleasing diversion and there should be a splendid market for the production in schools, etc., and anywhere that a juvenile audience is to be catered to. Children will be sure to enjoy it. Tell them about Tibi Lubin and if you can secure stills to display in the lobby it shouldn't be difficult to interest them.

Give the title good prominence and remind them that "The Prince and the Pauper" is one of Mark Twain's best known works. You might make a specialty of matinee showings and make some arrangement with the various schools in your town for showings, one day for one school, and so on. For a regular program subject, it depends upon the people you cater to. It would hardly please those of downtown districts.

The World's Leading Distributor of Short Subjects

Announcement for 1922-23

In quality, quantity and diversity of product, Pathe is the world's leading distributor of short subject motion pictures.

This supremacy has come from the unceasing and earnest effort of years, to render to the exhibitors of the nation a service and a product which they could get nowhere else.

Pathe is a specialist in pictures under feature length.

Short subjects are of more importance to the exhibitor today than they have ever been. Conditions which have so hampered the production of true quality features have not affected the Pathe short subject product. That product is better today than it has ever been. Hence short subject programs have come to stay, since they fill a very real need. Pathe offers complete short subject programs of a quality and diversity suited to any audience in the land. Pathe offers also the best so-called "fillers" that money will buy.

Unhampered by the restrictions imposed by a regular feature release, Pathe offers a limited supply of true Special Features. "Nanook of the North" and "The Isle of Zorda" illustrate their quality.

Six Great Comedy Specials

HAROLD LLOYD is the only star in the world who has played in one picture in one theatre for thirteen consecutive weeks, with the run still unfinished. At this writing he is on his thirteenth week at the Symphony, Los Angeles.

Pathe announces with pride the return of Mr. Lloyd as a Pathe star, and the release during the coming year of six feature comedies that will represent the supreme effort of his career.

Exhibitors of the nation know that there is only one Lloyd and that he stands alone as an attraction the wide world over.

“Snub” Pollard Comedies

Now in Two Reels

“Snub” Pollard has won his spurs as the star in one-reel comedies.

His success has demanded a more pretentious product.

Pathe now announces thirteen two-reel comedies starring the little comedian with the big mustache, to be released during the coming season.

Hal Roach, king of comedy producers, will give these comedies his personal supervision, which means that they will be the best that can be made.

The thousands of exhibitors who are playing the one-reel Hal Roach Comedies starring “Snub” Pollard, will welcome this new product with pleasure, —and with profit.

A Screen Magazine—One Every Week

Each number of Pathe Review must be varied in subject, each subject must be interesting and the issue as a whole must be strikingly beautiful.

Is it surprising that the Review is popular with both exhibitors and public? That many exhibitors tell us that it is the best screen magazine ever issued?

The Review has introduced delightful "trick" pictures, such as the game of cards, played without players; Photographic Gems, which are true masterpieces, showing Nature in her many moods; striking little dramas with a novel slant, like the "Drama illustrated by feet"; the superb Slow Motion; and the incomparable Pathe-color, which appears in each issue.

Science, sport, art, travel, nature, novelty; you’ll find them all in the Pathe Review.
Pathe announces with pride four big, vital Pathé-serials for the coming year. In stars, stories, casts, direction and production they fully measure up to the very high standard Pathe has set and will maintain.

Pathe Playlets

The heavy bookings, the highly favorable comment on Pathe Playlets, have proven that the length of a picture has nothing to do with its exhibition value.

Picture value is based upon the story, director, star and cast. If they are all good, the picture is good, whether in six parts or three.

Pathe Playlets are features with really successful records, carefully selected and re-edited to three parts.

They, with other Pathe short subjects, enable you to present a diversified, intensely interesting program with which you can make money.

What some of the many exhibitors say:

"The Playlets are all Pathe claims them to be."—M. Swedberg, Cort, Luverne, Minn.

"The Playlets are just the thing for the suburban house. We have noted an increase in patronage on each succeeding one."—C. E. Crane, Ideal, S. St. Paul, Minn.

"Pathe claims each Playlet is a 'thrill-packed story.' That's true. Pathe claims that each Playlet has powerful dramatic action. That's true. Am using these with a Pathe serial and Hal Roach comedies, and claim that's the best program in the United States."—Mrs. W. M. Kimbro, Greenland Theatre, Greensboro, Ga.

"I find by booking the Playlets with a serial and the Rolin comedies I have a varied program so that each part will suit each patron and it has increased my attendance to a wonderful extent. This gives the small town exhibitor a wonderful and varied program to suit all at a reasonable feature price and helps to keep the service rental down. One gets as much in the Playlet as in most five or six-reel features."

DIRECTOR .................. Jack Conway
AUTHOR .................. George Bronson Howard
SCENARIO BY ............... George Hively
CAMERAMAN ................ Virgil Miller

AS A WHOLE... Good entertainment in Universal's latest crook picture; well sustained interest and pleasing romantic twist

STORY...... Has some suspense and not unusual but well handled situations that make it interesting

DIRECTION...... Satisfactory; keeps interest alive and story moves along at good pace

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. All right
LIGHTINGS .................. All right
STAR...... Pretty good in this; doesn't do as much posing as usual

INTERIORS .................. Suitable
DETAIL .................. Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Burglar breaks into house and is forced into marriage with girl who had planned to meet her suitor at that hour

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,130 feet

Admirers of crook stories will likely be pleased with this George Bronson Howard story which serves as Herbert Rawlinson's latest vehicle. It is not an especially original piece, but has been capably handled by the director and should satisfy a big enough majority to make it a good number. "Don't Shoot" deals with a crook's regeneration, but there is no preachment or reform propaganda to annoy those who object to such incidents. In fact the regeneration in this case is quite accidental. It involves a fairly worn twist in which the burglar hero is forced to marry a girl he has never seen before. The idea has been used in various ways before, but Director Conway keeps it logical and interesting.

The interest is well sustained throughout, and there are one or two effective bits of suspense. Toward the close some action is gotten in in the way of a free-for-all fight with the hero victor, of course. Otherwise there isn't much action in the picture.

The story is a good one for Rawlinson and he does better work than he has in some of his recent offerings. There's less posing and an apparently more serious effort to please his audience. Edna Murphy is a pleasant leading lady and the cast, generally, is quite satisfactory.

It is easy enough to follow once the story gets started. At first it is a trifle confusing because of the various sequences, one dealing with the rich girl and her Texas suitor, another with the crook, and a third that has to do with a political boss and his schemes. Conway brings them together, nicely, however, and the remainder runs off smoothly enough.

Story: James Harrington Court, known as "The Posson," makes a midnight visit to the home of Buck Lindsay for the purpose of stealing a necklace belonging to Buck's fiancée, Velma Gay. Buck is waiting for another midnight visitor, Velma's lover, Archie Craig. Believing Velma had planned an elopement and taking Court for Craig, Buck has a minister on hand to perform an immediate marriage. Velma finds herself married to a crook, but her influence reforms him and they are happy until Court's former ruler, a political boss, demands that he handle a little "job" for him. How Court wins out and keeps "straight" completes the story.

Use Catchlines, Star's Name And Whatever Appeals Best To Your Folks

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you know your crowd likes crook stories you will be able to satisfy them with this latest Universal release, starring Herbert Rawlinson, "Don't Shoot." And even if they aren't particularly keen about crook themes, they will probably like this one because it has some action and a rather interesting romantic side that you can refer to in appealing to your women patrons. Where the star is a favorite, use his name prominently, and stills will give a fair idea of what he has to do in "Don't Shoot." Tell them he goes from crook to cabaret dancer in his latest film, "Don't Shoot." You might also play up the regeneration angle if you think that would appeal to them. Edna Murphy's name might also be mentioned. They may remember her from the Fox pictures in which she co-starred with Johnny Walker.

uncle's ranch and foils attempt of foreman who has killed uncle and plans to get his money
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,694 feet

"West of Chicago" is about the best story Charles Jones has had of late. It is particularly well suited to him and a bit out of the ordinary for a western. It has the usual plotting of a villain and the brave hero who spoils his plans, to be sure, but they are handled with some originality, with a first rate surprise for the ending that makes it quite a satisfying offering of its kind.

A Satisfying Western For Your Program

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who have a regular call for westerns can put this latest Charles Jones feature down for a booking and feel sure they will satisfy their folks. If they like westerns at all they'll be satisfied with this one and even those not overly partial to this type of entertainment, should be pleased with "West of Chicago" because it has a good plot besides the regulation western atmosphere.

There is only one thing you might have against Philo McCullough as the villain and foreman who plans to secure his employer's riches, and that is his stupidity. Just how he ever expected to get away with his scheme isn't obvious since he took into his confidence, about everyone that came along. And of course he made a bad mistake when he took hero Charles Jones into his scheme. Otherwise Scarborough's story is as logical as most westerns and there is some good action such as Jones' leap from horseback to a moving train and the usual riding.

Directors Dunlap and Wallace have distributed the action fairly well and the best thing they do in the whole picture, is to keep the news that the uncle is not dead, until the very end. They should have produced hero's sister, Patricia, since she is spoken of so frequently in the sub-titles and it would have been well to have shown the audience how the uncle escaped death in the quick-sand pit.

Jones is very pleasing in this and it is better that he is not accorded so many posing close-ups in this, not that he isn't a good "looker" but they don't go with a cowboy hero. Rene Adoree is pleasing as the girl in the case and the bad men are convincingly bad.

Story: Con Daly's uncle sends for him to come home and manage his new ranch. When Con arrives, Cooksey, the foreman, explains that Daly is dead and he is in charge. Con keeps his identity a secret and plans to learn the foreman's scheme. Cooksey has threatened the sister of the boy held for Dalys murder, into playing the part of the late Daly's niece while he invites Con to play the nephew. Con joins the con-spiration and at the right time gives Cooksey the beating that is coming to him, while the uncle reappears on the scene and Con asks the girl to retain the name of Daly by marrying him. Her brother is then freed.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,609 feet

W. C. Tuttle’s story, “Assisting Ananias,” from which “Fools of Fortune” has been adapted, might have made amusing reading but it certainly doesn’t make a good screen comedy. In the first place there doesn’t seem to have been enough situations, or strong enough ones, to satisfy the demands of a feature comedy. Probably a two reeler would have been thoroughly amusing but to get it to five reels it has been necessary to pad it so frequently and there are so many sub-titles, that its interest is disconnected.

The situations presented in “Fools of Fortune” may appeal to those who can laugh easily but to the majority they are likely to appear quite silly and almost entirely without entertainment value. Added to this there are so many sub-titles (they are about equally divided with the pictures) and they are such poor attempts at humor that folks are apt to be annoyed more than entertained.

The director doesn’t make any attempt to get into the story until the beginning of the second reel, taking up the whole first reel to introduce the comedians, Frank Dill, Russell Simpson, Tully Marshall and Frank Brownlee, who try hard enough to get in comedy business but seldom succeed. Some familiar gags such as the pullman sequence is used with the four cowboys piled in one berth. Then there is a silly Englishman, Willie, who gets tipsy and also tries hard to make you laugh.

It may not be the director’s fault entirely that “Fools of Fortune” isn’t a good picture because he didn’t have strong comedy material to work with, but there are times when he could have gotten more genuine comedy and less foolishment out of the situations. Marguerite De La Motte is very much out of place in the picture and has practically nothing to do but pose for a close-up now and then.

Story: Chuck Warner decides to impersonate Ashburton de Puyster, long lost son of the millionaire, Milton de Puyster, and collect as the rightful heir. He is accompanied East by three cowboy friends, one posing as an Indian. They get into all sorts of mix-ups until finally they arrive at the de Puyster home. It happens that Chuck is not de Puyster’s son but the long lost child of his second wife, whose name had been Warner.

May Do If It Isn’t Difficult To Make Them Laugh

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Possibly your matinee crowd, if composed mostly of children, would get some enjoyment out of "Fools of Fortune" because it doesn’t necessarily have to be "sensible" comedy to amuse the younger element. But it is quite doubtful whether or not the grown-ups will be satisfied with the picture. Unless you know they are very easily suited and not too particular about their comedy entertainment, you can show it to them but probably it would be well to see it first and use your own judgment.

Better let them know it is a comedy because the title won’t indicate just what it is. Catchlines could read: "One way to become a millionaire is to present yourself to some millionaire as his long lost son. Chuck Warner tries it in 'Fools of Fortune.' See what happens to his scheme." Or, "Want to get rich quick? See how it’s done in 'Fools of Fortune' at the blank theater."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,880 feet

At last Fox has made a picture with a story featuring Tom Mix's wonder horse, Tony, and while Mix is given stellar prominence in the billing, it is really Tony who is the star of the offering. The piece is an adaptation of Max Brand's novel, "Alcatraz," a particularly appropriate vehicle that affords excellent opportunities for Mr. Tony and a unique entertainment as well.

Lynn Reynolds has handled the story intelligently and Jim, a bride.

and it is especially noticeable that he does not allow things to become illogical or far-fetched and there are plenty of times, in connection with the marvelous instinct of the horse, where it must have been difficult to keep from over-estimating the animal's intelligence.

Reynolds took his company on desert location to shoot the picture and throughout there are some of the most beautiful and unusual backgrounds that have been found in a feature in a long time. The photography is also excellent and the camera work first class. The long shots are particularly effective.

Tony has long been a familiar and important figure in the Tom Mix features but this time he goes it alone, acquitting himself capably at all times. It seems almost impossible but a twist of Tony's head or a flash of his eye is sufficient to register his mode and it is little short of remarkable that they have succeeded in making an entirely tame animal play the part of a wild mustang.

Brand's story furnishes a rather unusual entertainment and an interesting story that will appeal to a great many people and Director Reynolds has done splendid work on the production end of it. Tom Mix does some fast riding and there is a love interest woven in which Claire Adams plays the principal part. The usual western bad men have a part in the plot to steal horses and spoil hero's chances with the girl.

Story: Jim Perris accepts Marianne Jordan's commission to catch the wild mustang which is luring her father's horses from the ranch. Tony, the mustang, eludes his captor until he is eventually trapped, but Jim's kind pats wins Tony, who later saves Jim's life when Hervey, foreman of the Jordan ranch and a rustler, tries to get Jim because Jim knows he (Hervey) has stolen Jordan's horses. Tony acquires a master

A Good Entertainment and You Can Promise An Unusual One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here's a real human picture, wholesome in its value as entertainment, and a worth while offering generally. You can be certain to please all of your patrons with it and be sure to make it plain that "Just Tony" is entirely different from Mix's previous pictures and that his horse, Tony, is the real star of it. Mix's admirers know his horse by now and they'll be interested to see the picture.

Your local prevention of cruelty to animals society will probably be only too happy to cooperate with you in showing the picture since it depicts what kindness will do for animals. Tell them they have seen pictures with dog stars but here's something different. Play up Mix's name but give Tony his due share of prominence. Your men patrons should be appealed to in particular.

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Girl becomes implicated in plot of underworld leader to overthrow district attorney’s clean-up campaign

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .. 5,600 feet

Leroy Scott’s story of the underworld couldn’t secure the approval of the Censorship Commission when submitted under the title of “The Night Rose,” but with some changes in sub-titles and the necessary cuts, plus a new main title, the picture is being shown at the Capitol, all properly stamped and labeled by the Commission. Goldwyn has removed the objectional bits, suggestions of white slave traffic, etc. and there is nothing strictly offensive remaining in the picture.

Through the process the story has become somewhat disjointed and illogical as well as rather hard to follow. For a crook, and underworld leader, who is supposed to be so “slick,” Chaney takes some great risks and there are other illogical twists that make “Voices of the City,” at best, only mildly entertaining.

The story is easy enough to follow at first but from the point where the leader plans to take his young bookkeeper’s girl for himself, things become compi-licated and incomprehensive. They get around the situation carefully enough by a sub-title that refers to the leader’s “marriage” to the girl. The plot becomes more involved in the leader’s plan to get rid of the hero and at the same time upset the plans of the district attorney who has instigated a clean-up campaign.
No suspense is created because the audience is taken into the confidence of the schemers.

It is difficult to judge the director’s work after so many changes have been made in the picture since he finished with it. One scene, that in which hero Cullin Landis is shot, shows Landis waiting for the director’s cue to register “wounded.” The cutter should have caught this one.

Lon Chaney has done much better things than the role of McGee in this and what acting bits he did have, have been largely eliminated. Leatrice Joy is a suitable heroine and Cullen Landis is cast as an unusually dumb young man. Betty Schade is McGee’s girl who finally kills him. Others are John Bowers, Richard Tucker and “Lefty” Flynn.

Story: McGee, underworld leader and restaurateur, wants his young bookkeeper’s girl, Georgina Rodman.
He plans to get rid of Jimmy and at the same time spoil the district attorney’s effort to locate the girl who is sought by her people. Sally, formerly McGee’s girl, and jealous of Georgina, warns Jimmy, who is shot by McGee’s man before he can escape. How one of McGee’s henchmen squeals, Jimmy recovers and McGee is captured, completes the story.

Depends Upon the People You Cater To For You To Decide
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Voices of the City" is an ordinary feature and will probably be accepted by the average audience as a fair entertainment, by the better class patronage as a poor picture and by the cheaper tastes as a first rate underworld melodrama. It depends upon the class you cater to just how the picture will go over.

If you have a crowd that favors more or less sensational stories you can promise them they’ll be satisfied with “Voices of the City,” an original Leroy Scott story of the underworld. Lon Chaney’s name can be used with the title and to keep yourself straight with your regular patrons, let them know just what you are showing and they’ll have no comebacks if they are displeased. The title isn’t sufficient to let them know what to expect so you’ll have to resort to catch-lines or newspaper notices if your local paper gives you space.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 6,244 feet

From the looks of “Nice People” it would seem that one of the biggest items in the cost of production was for the cigarettes consumed. And it is only in this connection that Wm. DeMille’s direction might be criticised, but he certainly does overdo the cigarette smoking. There’s hardly a half dozen scenes in the picture in which the star and her society friends are not puffing on the weed and the longer the holder, the more smoke, in nearly every case. In one instance, Julia Faye, shows what she can do with a pipe, society’s latest fad.

All this, of course, belongs to the people whom Rachel Crothers satirizes as “nice” and quite appropriately.
The stage play serves the needs of the screen nicely and the picture offers a first rate entertainment and one that will be thoroughly enjoyed by a large majority, particularly those who depend upon the “movies” for their information as to what goes on in society. There is nothing offensive, and the only ones to object may be the anti-cigarette league or some reformers who may decide that they are protecting the public’s morals by not letting it see how “Nice People” live.

The production is good and the story smooth running.
Towards the close it drags slightly while Bebe Daniels tries to vamp Wallie Reid into proposing, but eventually she has to do the asking herself. There are a lot of good touches and some good comedy bits—one in a henery that doesn’t require sub-titles to get a laugh. The sub-titles throughout are very good.

Bebe Daniel’s admirers will like her work in this and Conrad Nagel also will please them. Wallace Reid hasn’t very much to do except be on hand for the clutch-fade-out. The cast is good and includes Julia Faye, Edward Martindel, Wm. Boyd and Claire McDowell.

Story: Teddy Gloucester (Bebe Daniels) leaves home because her Dad forbids her visiting a notorious cabaret. Teddy, accompanied by Scotty Wilbur, poor but willing to marry the rich Teddy, continues her life of jazz at her Dad’s farm. Society refuses to take her back once she has spent a night in company with Scotty so it remains for Billy Wade, an ex-soldier who happens in at the farm, to reform Teddy. Later Teddy’s Dad forgives her and she is happy except for one thing. She loves Billy but he refuses to submit to her vamping until Teddy proposes and he accepts after she promises to be just an old fashioned wife.

Should Prove a Profitable Number Especially With a Certain Crowd

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Very likely you will be able to do pretty good business with this latest William DeMille production.
The success of the stage play must have reached the cities at least and by this time they are probably well enough acquainted with the story of Rachel Crothers’ play to want to see the film version.

In certain localities all the exhibitor will have to do will be to show a short trailer prior to the regular showing date, and he can rest assured they’ll be back to see the picture. There are enough well known names to warrant calling it a picture with an all-star cast. Let them know there are Bebe Daniels, Wallace Reid, Conrad Nagel, Julia Faye and other well known players.

DETAIL ........................ Requisite
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Doctor elopes with wife of prospector who saved his life; years later the husband and wife are reunited
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,679 feet
This is the second time in the last few months that William Farnum has lost his screen wife, first in "Shackles of Gold" and now in "Moonshine Valley." Both stories are the old eternal triangle theme though differently worked out. The main trouble with "Moonshine Valley" is that the story is apparent from the very start. Once the prospector saves the doctor's life and brings him into his home to recover, the spectator knows that Bill is going to be minus a wife. But you can't think much of him for giving the other man a chance to make love to his wife. Somehow or other screen husbands are too careless about leaving their wives in the care of other men.

The story's dramatic moments are pretty unconvincing but there is one pleasing episode that contains a good heart interest twist. It is that in which Farnum finds a little girl, unknown to him, but the daughter of his wife and the other man. How the child brings about his regeneration makes for a rather effective heart interest. Little Dawn O'Day is a mighty appealing and cute child player.

Farnum has just the kind of opportunities that he enjoys in in the sequence in which he becomes a drink crazed degenerate as a result of his misfortune. There are all kinds of close-ups showing him raving and looking like anything but a human being. He still over-does his dramatic parts but the rest of his work is well done. Sadie Mullen handles the part of the faithless wife very well and Holmes Herbert is an adequate villain.

Story: Ned Connors saves the life of Dr. Martin and his wife nurses the physician back to health. Connors leaves for a prospecting trip and upon his unexpected return finds his wife in Martin's arms. Connors sends Martin away but he turns and shoots. Believing Connors dead he takes the woman away with him. A few years later Connors, now a degenerate, swearing vengeance, finds a little girl. The child's influence brings about the man's regeneration. She becomes ill and the doctor that is called happens to be Martin. Connors puts off his revenge to save the child's life, but in a fight, later, Martin is killed. Connors finds his former wife, forgives her and is happy with her and the child.

Appeal to Those Who Like Star and Use Catchlines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you number enough of Farnum's admirers among your patrons you can show them "Moonshine Valley" and satisfy them. Where they like the star and his work, the picture will have no trouble getting over.
However, the success of the film depends largely upon the star's popularity. Or if you know they favor eternal triangle themes, you can count on it pleasing also.

Catchlines will give a good idea of the story and it might be well to let them know what it is about, otherwise from the title they might expect a bootlegging story. Use the angle in which the child brings about the regeneration of a derelict and promise them a delightful child player in Dawn O'Day. She's a real treat. There are plenty of good locations in the picture that make it quite good to look at.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,430 feet

Hoot Gibson's last picture, "Trimmed," was a good one but "The Loaded Door" is even better. The story is a bit out of the ordinary for a western and although it contains some more or less tried and true situations, it remains distinctive and offers a thoroughly satisfying entertainment. Elements of comedy and drama have been splendidly blended with neither one dominating the other.

Director Pollard has kept things evenly balanced with the result that "The Loaded Door" is a really worth while comedy drama. The humorous touches are contributed by Victor Potel and C. L. Sherwood, two tramps, and there hasn't been a better tramp duet since "Turn to the Right." Potel is a tramp philosopher who speaks in poetry while his fat companion, Sherwood, is an uninterested partner. Sherwood's make-up is great and he gets laughs without trying for them. Pollard introduces the comedy pair at proper intervals and they are not entirely irrelevant to the story either.

The action is well distributed and there are some good bits, though not as much as you find in the customary variety of wild and woolly shoot 'em dead westerns. There are one or two good fights and one particularly effective suspense in the sequence in which the villain plots to blow up the ranch house. It is so arranged that when a door is opened the blast will go off. Pollard brings the heroine to the door several times in her attempt to escape her pursuer.

Hoot Gibson does good work as "Cherub," the cowboy, and will certainly please his admirers with this one. He has a good supporting cast with Gertrude Olmsted as the leading lady. Noble Johnson and Joseph Harris are the bad men and Victor Potel and C. L. Sherwood provide the laughs.

Story: Bert Lyons returns to his ranch to find his former foreman dead and the place leased to a real estate shark. The new crowd is trafficking in booze and narcotics under the guise of raising cattle. Bert sees his old sweetheart, Molly Grainger, who tells him of her suspicions. The smugglers do not like Bert and plan to "get" him. Meanwhile the new boss plans to kidnap Mollie, telling her if she will accompany him across the border, he will save her brother who is in prison, charged with murder. How Bert learns of the ruse, rides to Mollie's rescue, rounds up the smugglers and clears Mollie's brother completes the story.

A Good One For Star's Admirers and Any Average Audience

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You will be showing them an entertaining picture in Gibson's latest. Promise them a first rate comedy drama and don't be afraid to tell them there are some first rate laughs in "The Loaded Door." If you can secure a trailer showing the two tramps it should bring them back for the feature and for the star's admirers, say it is one of the best stories he has had.

The title is a catchy one and affords good exploitation possibilities. They'll wonder what it is all about. It is pertinent and will go well with catchlines. Get them interested in coming in to see the picture and you can be quite sure they will go out satisfied.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Music master makes a genius of violinist by planning a love affair for him

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .............. 6,700 feet

There's hardly a doubt but what "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" will prove a good box office picture for certain exhibitors, those catering to the more sensational tastes and a more or less cheap class of patronage. It is the story that will appeal strongly to this type of audience because it contains a few risque situations and the sort of atmosphere that appeals to their sensation loving minds.

Director Smallwood has handled the piece well enough and apparently toned it down considerably but the Apache episode is certainly due for some scene eliminations before the audiences in some states see it. He has gone in just a little too strong for suggestive detail in the way of close-ups in this sequence. The facial expressions of the players in this case are just a trifle too expressive. There is nothing offensive in the Moulin Rouge sequence and Smallwood has been quite elaborate in his depiction of the resort, which, to all appearances, is quite mild in comparison with the rating given it by the sub-title. The crowning of the queen of the Moulin Rouge is interesting and rather fantastic. The story is smooth running and the continuity is a good one.

The story's main idea is a fairly far-fetched one in the sort of theory it offers. A great music master seeks to make a genius of a pupil by putting him through a series of emotions for which he plans extensively, arranging a love affair, a disillusionment and a final reunion when he is satisfied that his student can at last play the violin with feeling.

Martha Mansfield does good work as the girl but does not seem quite as attractive in this, probably due to not being always photographed to the best advantage. Joseph Striker is adequate as the student and the remainder of the cast is suitable.

Story: Rosalie Anjou is saved from an Apache by Jules Riboux, an artist, and Tom Richards, a student of the violin, when she accidentally crashes into their studio. Jules Rousseau, an old music master who despair of kindling the flame of genius in his pupil, seizes upon a love which blossoms between Tom and Rosalie to prevail upon the girl to dance at the Moulin Rouge, a notorious night cafe in Paris, that Tom's lessons may continue, the master pledging secrecy. But he betrays her secret and Tom bitterly denounces Rosalie. He then throws all the anguish of his soul into his bow. The master is elated and confesses that he bartered the girl's good name to awaken Tom's soul, without which genius would have been denied him. Tom saves Rosalie who tries to drown herself and there is a reunion.

Will Make Money If You Have the Right Crowd For It
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who know their patrons favor more or less sensational stories will surely be able to cash in on "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" by promising them a story of Paris' night life and telling them about the Apache sequence. There is nothing terribly offensive even in this sequence but it is quite certain there will have to be some eliminations made. It is not a picture for juvenile audiences by any means so you will have to be careful if you cater to family trade.

The title should give a fair idea of the type of picture it is and it will be in the lobby will probably bring them in. Martha Mansfield's name can be used in connection with the title and the proper exploitation should get it over with the crowd it will appeal to.
Some Short Reels

"The Empty House"—Sherlock Holmes—Educational
Type of production.............................2 reel drama
Here is another Sherlock Holmes mystery built from the well known stories of Conan Doyle. This time the criminal takes a pot shot at the famous detective and for a moment you think all is lost. The suspense is great. The first shots take place at a club where you see a group of men playing cards. A highly polished cigarette case on the table next to the dealer reflects the cards that he deals. His cheating is discovered and that very night his accuser is found dead. Holmes is brought into the case. The gentleman criminal learns about this and goes to the empty house opposite Holmes’ residence. Here he can see across the street into the windows of the house. Dr. Watson and a detective from Scotland Yard hide in the empty house and see the assassin load his high-power air rifle and shoot at the famous detective. Then they arrest him and bring him across the street. Holmes meets them at the door for what the criminal shot was nothing but a waxen figure. Of course the man is not accused of killing a dummy but he is charged with the murder of his colleague. The bullets are both the same. While no women enter into this story it is well up to the standard of the series and holds the attention throughout. It will make an ideal program picture and please the average audience.

"Bath Days"—Century—Universal
Type of production.............................2 reel comedy
"Bath Days" presents an average number of the Century comedies. Harry Sweet plays the part of the boy and Jackie Morgan the role of his brother. The story is a little rambling but the interest is held through a series of gags that employ a combination bath-tub and an automobile. In the end the house is flooded by an overflow in the bathroom. The picture is filled with gags and contains several laughs. It presents little that is new but nevertheless will entertain the average audience who enjoy this type of comedy.

"Makin’ Movies"—Johnny Jones—Pathe
Type of production.............................2 reel comedy
Little Gertrude Messinger and Johnny Jones presents an amusing adventure with films in the second of their series called "Makin’ Movies." This time the juvenile stars step behind the scenes and do a little picture all of their own called "Uncle Tom’s Cabin." Johnny got the idea when he went out to the coast on a visit and accidentally played a little role of a newsboy. He bought a small camera when he returned home and became his own producer, manager and director. The scenario was culled from "Uncle Tom’s Cabin" and the blood-bounds were gathered from all over town. When finished they showed the picture to a selected gathering and expected them all to weep—but it turned to a comedy. Financial ruin turned to success and the exhibitor promised to play the show all week. The production has not near as many laughs as the first of the series but it does contain a lot of clean and novel fun. It is very different from anything yet done on the screen and will more than please the average audience. Johnny Jones does some clever acting and little Gertrude Messinger is most captivating in anything that she does. Imagine the kid, in the role of Little Eva, chewing gum as she ascends to heaven on the end of a rope!

"Toonerville Topics"—Educational
Type of production.............................2 reel comedy
Here is another Toonerville Comedy originated by Fontaine Fox and edited by Ralph Spence. The classic old trolley and its Skipper are the central figures. The story is very mild and contains very little action but a good deal of humor is obtained from the characters presented. An old town faker lands in Toonerville and puts up at a hotel. Here he meets the Skipper’s niece and tries a little flirtation. Her sweetheart, however decides to cure the traveling salesman and lays a deep plot. He informs the Skipper that the city man is a checkermanic and becomes violent at the mention of the game checkers. They “frame” him up and lead him out of town in the trolley car which is readily converted into a jail. This number of the Toonerville Comedies is up to the standard of the series and will please the majority. A little re-editing would greatly help the offering.

Pathé Review No. 170
Type of production.............................1 reel magazine
After opening with some splendid photographic shots of country landscapes this interesting number of Pathé Review fades into a scientific section which shows you what microscopic life looks like in ordinary water. "The Children of the Sun" is the title of another section in this magazine and illustrates how a lot of children are given the sunshine treatment for the white plague. The children run about naked in the severest weather and engage in snowball fights. Other sections of this view show in slow motion how Joseph Kirkwood, the Australian golf champion, executes some of his difficult shots. This review closes with the usual colored travel pictures.

"Simply Shocking"—Star—Universal
Type of production.............................1 reel comedy
Margaret Cullington and Jack Duffy are the chief fun makers in this fairly amusing Star comedy. The action is timely. It is based on reformers and one piece bathing suits. The old lady reformer forbids her maid from kissing the ice-man but ships on a cake of ice and becomes frozen to it. A barrel saves her modesty. But on the beach the reforming lady insists on arresting all girls with one piece bathing suits until the ice man shows her the picture of herself in the barrel. The comedy has some funny incidents and contains several laughs. Not only will this prove entertaining but it will also gain the sentiment of the average audience. Reformers are not very popular with the average audience and nothing pleases the folks better than to see them disgraced.

"The Egg"—Amalgamated Prod.—Metro
Type of production.............................1 reel comedy
"The Egg" seems to be a cross between a Chaplin and a Larry Sennon. Stan Laurel is the leading comedian and in spite of the age of the gags he manages to put over several hearty laughs. When Charlie played in "The Kid" he has a little business in which he selects his cigarette butt from a soap box. Stan Laurel picks his out of a cigar box. A good portion of the comedy takes place in a saw mill. It is built along regulation lines and contains the standard comedy types. The final scenes include a chase in and about the saw mill. The comedy as a whole presents but an average offering. Most of the gags have been done before in several variations.
Short Reels

"Falls Ahead"—Fox
Type of production..........................1 reel cartoon
Mutt and Jeff have some very funny adventures with a waterfall in this cartoon. They land in the water and hang on to a bale of hay but are carried on by the current to the dangerous precipice. Here they are just about to go over when they are saved by the dam being locked. As the river dries out they find themselves perched on the edge of the cliff. After many struggling efforts they gain a secure foothold and breathe a sigh of relief, but just then a washerwoman empties her tub into the stream and down go Mutt and Jeff. The animation is good throughout and many of the adventures of these well known comic characters will provoke mirth and laughter. Mutt and Jeff always make a good program filler and are always good for a series of laughs from any audience regardless of the weather.

"The House of a Thousand Trembles"—Star—Universal
Type of production..........................1 reel comedy
The gags and business in this comedy, starring Neely Edwards, are derived from a haunted house and several ghosts, to say nothing of the colored man. It is in this haunted house that Ned meets the girl, and together they attempt to capture the ghost. After many experiences they finally capture the man in the sheet and knock him unconscious only to discover that he is the girl’s sweetheart. In the end Ned and his hobo valet decide that it would be best for them to leave the house. Most of the gags in this single reeler were done before in several variations and the laughs are not too close together. However it will entertain an audience that is not over particular and likes to laugh at the same old jokes. Most of the laughs will come from the fear that the colored man has for ghosts.

"There Must Be a Reason"
Pop Grout was the family gold digger

Goldwyn presents

Rupert Hughes

motion picture masterpiece—
the story of Pop who paid all the bills while his family had all the fun

Written and Directed by the Author

Money! Money! Money! Pop was easy and the family knew just how to make a little touch. While he slaved to pay the bills, his wife and children learned to play bridge with a grand manner.

Dear old Dad. He remembered other days when a little girl in a gingham apron announced the dinner. Now there was a butler.

Now there was only scorn for his lack of social grace and his shabby clothes. But he remembered the dear, meaningful words of long ago, "John, I love you."

With a great cast including Claude Gillingwater, Patsy Ruth Miller, Cullen Landis, Richard Tucker, Lucille Ricksen, Kate Lester.

Greater than "The Old Nest" Back Home

And maybe it isn't good. To be here. This Europe stuff is all right. Know what the proud papa said: He wouldn't take $10,000 for his younger. And wouldn't give a nickel. For another one. And that's it. I wouldn't give ten thousand bucks. For all that happened. And all that I learned. In Europe. And at the moment. Despite the heat. Wouldn't give a plugged nickel. To start in again.

NUTSHELL STUFF

This is certain: There isn't anything to fear from Europe. In production. There is nothing to worry. About in anything but inventions. And they are sure turning out some wonders. From Berlin you were informed. Of the way they plan to make duplicate prints. Without the use of the negative. You can imagine what will happen. If this gets in the hands of the wrong hands. There is another. The perfection of a device. Which will make definitely stereoscopic. All motion pictures. If this works out. Then there will be a real new impetus. To the industry. Can you imagine what that will mean? In colored photography.

Talking of colored photography—they are busy on that. In Germany. And figure they pretty near have a new idea developed. To a point where it will change everything in production.

Then there is a machine. Made in Germany. By some Swiss experts. Who have taken the lab experts. From the old UFA organization. To watch things. And they expect. Their methods of developing. Printing. And toning. Will revolutionize things. Pittsburgh and the West. Reported to have it. For this country.

DIFFERENT POINT OF VIEW

Can be found. As to production. Anywhere in Europe. The directors and producers. As a whole. Think our ideas are all wrong. They will continue making heavy, gloomy, tragic things. Until they wake up. Their studio equipment and accessories. Except perhaps for the famous EFA studio in Berlin. Cannot hold an eyelash. To even the poorest equipped studio here. Their props are a joke. In all of France. There are but two Sunlight Arc lamps. They are owned by a smart woman in Paris. Who rents them out. To producers. And they are kept busy. Making the rounds.

In Paris. Production methods—as against our own—are so lax. So different. They are not comparable. If the leading lady is tired. Well—the production halts. System: efficiency. Business methods in making pictures. As they are known here. Are unknown in France.

ONE PICTURE COMPANIES

All over Europe. You'll find them. Some dead. Some active. Some in prospect. Some further away than that. Concerns capitalized to make one picture. The inevitable must happen. With this sort of an idea. Long ago American producers learned. That to meet the market. More than one picture had to be planned for the organization. But over there. Well. If you could see the roster. Of the companies that started to make one picture. And then went broke. Boy: howdy; what a lot of them there are! There are a few companies operating otherwise. But they are the exception. These concerns go along all right. But the others—well. The percentage is all against them. As it naturally must be.

ONCT UPON A TIME

Did you know that Reggie Barker was a stage director? And that Emmett Flynn was a taxi driver? Yes. In Denver. (Which is a long way from here). Was working for a certain man. Now in a very big job. With a very big company. He wasn't so big then. But he was working on a feature called "Alimony." And Flynn sat up all night to help him. And right then and there he lost his taxi. And now see where he is.

But that's nothing. Rex Ingram was a sculptor. In those long ago days.

HEADQUARTERS

New ones. Starting up. Over at the Commercial Trust Company. Where "Doc" Gianinni holds forth. When he arrived from the Coast. And took over the Commercial. There was some film business there. But now. Well. You can almost meet anyone you want to see. In his office. Or waiting to catch him a moment. Has one great asset. Turns them down with such a sweet smile. That they come back again. And that's sure something. For a banker.

Incidently. Joe Schenck. Is a director. Of the East River National. In which the Doctor's friends. Are heavily interested. The banker has a right to his title. too. Studied to be a medical man. But got into banking. And has saved more lives that way. Than possibly might have been done. In the other profession.

SUPERSTITIOUS

Years ago, Jesse Lasky had some offices in the Longacre Theater Building. A few months ago Joe Brandt needed offices. For the Federated. The same suite was available. Joe grabbed it quickly. Not that he’s superstitious. But he figures, if it was lucky for Jesse. Maybe it’ll be lucky. For Joe. And his bosses.

ONE ON VON

Out from the wild and woolly comes Von Herberg. J.H. of First National. And he’s a regular sport. But then he has to get on to the ways of the Big City. Every now and then. F’instruct: Von gets some seats for the Follies. Lays down a lot of real money for them. And then, about midnight—when the show was on—wanted to know whether it opened at 8:15 or 8:30? When told it was a midnight show he skedooted along.

MISTER VICE PRESIDENT

Being the title. Of the Duke of Rockaway. Otherwise y’el ected Jimmy Grainger. Now titles never hurt Jimmies. Not as yet, anyway. And he don’t really want his latest. But they had to call him by some big name. Over in Goldwyn’s. And this had to come.

Now this is a smart move. Jimmy has been handling Mickey Neilan’s affairs so long—he’s a partner with Mickey—that the world has forgotten his early training with Fox. Then he took up a lot of other managements. Such, incidentally, as the Chaplin contracts. And Holubar, and then Willie Hearst sent him for. To help iron out the linen. Over at Famous Players. And Jimmy showed Willie a few things. And then some. That made Joe Moore sit up. And that takes something. Then along came the Goldwyn move. And Joe Godsol cornered Jimmy. And the result is—well, watch what happens. It’ll be interesting.

OPTIMISM

In hunks. All around the industry. Over the outlook for Fall and Winter. Real prices in sight. For big pictures. Sales managers say it’s no use talking of anything but good times. Say when the coal strike is settled. And the railroad strike gets off the front page. That business will whirl. With a real whirl. Hope they’re right.

But on the other hand, Billy Brandt’s crowd. Figure prices are too doggoned high. And are talking of booking. Their own way. In bulk.

Better go slow, boys.

DANNY.

In the Courts

A judgment for $2,784 has been filed in the County Clerk’s office against the Michael Kessel Laboratories, Inc., by the Powers Film Products Co., which obtained the original judgment in the action in the Circuit Court of Bergen County, N. J.

Justice O’Malley of the Supreme Court has denied an injunction to Frederick W. Herbert against Fox, Herbert seeking to restrain Fox from continuing the exhibition of “Silver Wings.” Justice O’Malley said:

“The written promise of the defendant’s director general that the plaintiff should be given credit as co-author of the scenario was more in the nature of a matter of favor than of right.” Herbert still has a damage suit pending against Fox, alleging breach of contract. In the injunction proceeding he asked that the defendant be enjoined from showing “Silver Wings,” unless he was featured as co-author.

The Reeland Publishing Co. is being sued in the Supreme Court by the R-C, which seeks to recover $5,038, the value of certain cuts and plates and advertising cards, which the defendant were treated to over the defendant to be sold, but on which payment has not been made.

Leopold Singer has filed a judgment in the Supreme Court, for $2,622 against William M. Fizor and Herman Glueckman, doing business as the Capital Prod. The suit, for which judgment was given, was for films furnished to the defendants.

Action and Thrills Are Wanted

That the public wants action and thrills is the verdict of the majority of over 100 newspaper editors, to whom Fox sent questionnaires.

Stroheim Quits?

Coast Reports Him Out of Universal

—No Knowledge of Move in New York

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—On the best of authority, it is learned that Eric Von Stroheim has severed relations with Universal. This has not been officially announced, but, nevertheless, it is understood to be true.

Von Stroheim's new picture is "Merry-Go-Round." The cast which includes Mrs. Margery Kent, Madge Bell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Al Edmondson, Maude George, Allan Sears and George Hackathorne is under contract and the sets all constructed.

When R. H. Cochran, vice-presi-<ins>dent of Universal was asked concerning the above wire he said yesterday:

"So far as I know, Von Stroheim is still with Universal. This office is in constant touch with the studio and up to 4 o'clock today, no word has been received from the coast which would indicate that Von Stroheim was not at work. You cannot make this too emphatic so far as I am concerned."

While Von Stroheim's defection from Universal, if true, will come as a surprise to a great many, to others who are acquainted with the Von Stroheim situation the above wire is no surprise.

W. R. Rubert, former exchange manager, has been made assistant business manager at Universal City, to help Jules Bernheim.

The filming of “Bow Wow,” the Semmes comedy starring Louise Faucenda, John Henry, Jr., and Teddy, has been completed.

Perfect Pictures plan to start work within the next few days on a South Sea Island story, starring Barbara Bedford. Nat Deverich will direct.

Edward Sloman has established production quarters at the Berwick studios on Santa Monica Blvd., where he is cutting and titling “Hind Justice.”

Alex Francis will be seen in “The Man Who Needed Tomorrow,” with Lloyd Gough. Al Green is directing at the Lasky studio. He has completed work for Ed Sloman Prod.
Stroheim Quits?

Stroheim—Universal situation, the news will not prove so unusual. Von Stroheim and Universal had a tilt over “Foolish Wives.” After the picture was completed, the director’s prolonged editing finally resulted in the entire matter being cut from his hands. At the time, Mr. Stroheim stated that if the picture in its final form was not up to his expecting, he would not continue with the company.

Later when Von Stroheim returned to the coast it was sworn, and it is said that all difficulties had been straightened out. If the coast is true, it will be interesting to note that Stroheim will be in town when “Foolish Wives” makes its appearance. The original ideas of some producers toward Von Stroheim’s value as a producer were altered because of the excessive cost of the picture. Others are known to consider Von Stroheim one of America’s best directors, basing this opinion on his work in “Foolish Wives” and some of his earlier films.

The Associated Press reports that fakeout, kisses and similar scenes are not to be banned by the board of censors which has been newly created and will consist of five people. According to an order signed by Ricardo Lucas, secretary of the government, the board will veto only such shots as tends to have a criminal influence.

Piqua Faces "Blue" Sundays
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Piqua, O.—Unless Mayor A. W. Deweck has a change of heart this city will spend its future Sundays in a most blue atmosphere. He has ruled that only prescription druggists, the electric power plant and milk wagons may operate on the first day of the week. Not even gasoline for the family Henry may be purchased.

Putting It Over
Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. You along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you clean up.

Simple But Effective
Kearney, Neb.—Manager Swan of the Empress put over some unique night time exploitation when he played "Smith's Through." He used window cards in his retail merchant tie-ups and had them perforated and boxed with incandescent lights inside. The perforations outlined the illustrations and type in the picture and the light shining from within gave a fine display at night time without the cost of illuminating the whole window.

Tied Up With Shaving Team
Lansing, Mich.—"Half the Woman." Manager Hamer of the Strand made a special drive for male interest. The Barbasol Shaving Cream Co. was given a chance as a new product that it was anxious to advertise. Manager Hamer arranged for a tube to be given away to every man who attended "Hall the Woman." As the company that is distributing this product operates nationally the manager was given an opportunity for further tie-ups in this way. In the campaign here the men accepted the pamphlet and tube advertising the advantages of a clean shaven face and then was told to "Half the Woman."

This Is Efficiency!
Kalamazoo, Mich.—With "Penrod" scheduled to open immediately, and "My Boy" due to follow into The Majestic, Roy Tollson, manager, has put into practice an idea that approached the acme of efficiency. On the opening of the former film, it was decided to admit the first 25 youngsters for free at the box office free of charge, the second 25 for 5 cents each, the third 25 for 10 cents and the fourth 25 for 15 cents each. The information soon travelled about and there were more than 100 lads scurrying about to get in line, so that the police had to handle the situation. This in itself was a good idea, making a hit not only with the kiddies, but attracting the attention of grown-ups who wondered what it was all about, and were naturally made curious.

On top of this came another scheme. Each boy who went into the theater was given a "Jackie Coogan whiskle," appropriately captioned with advertising for "My Boy." He was made to understand that it was simply loaned to him and would be taken away if he didn't blow it when he got out on the street again. When the first matinee crowd emerged Kalamazoo sounded like Gary when the five o'clock whistles let off steam; and there wasn't a chance for any one in Kalamazoo not to know about the coming production.

In the Courts
The United States Moving Picture Corp. is being sued for $28,700 by James K. Polk, Washington attorney, for services rendered. It is alleged the defendant gave two notes, one for $12,500 and another for $30,000 and paid on account $13,800 leaving a balance due of the amount sued for. James K. Polk and the defendant were partners. The notes were made to him and Mr. Polk, but Mr. Martin refused to join as one of the plaintiffs.

(Please to THE FILM DAILY)
Los Angeles—Betty Compson was made defendant in a suit for $1,971 filed by John McFadden, her former bookkeeper and cashier, covering an amount alleged to be due for the disposal of films made during her career as a producer. The sum sought by McFadden is claimed to be covered by an agreement whereby he was to receive 30% of any amount derived from the sale of films and the return of insurance premiums. Miss Compson disclaims the existence of any agreement as to commission but states that McFadden's work in disposal of film was recompensed for in the salary paid him.

In Australia, and What Won’t Do, Told American Producers by F. H. Day—Will Talk With Hays

F. H. Day, a member of the Commonwealth Film Censorship of the Department of Trade, of Australia, is visiting American producers. During his stay he has conferred with not only large producers like Jesse Lasky, but a number of smaller and less important producers, making an effort to clarify to them the type of production which is desired in Australia, and that is, desired by the censor authorities, who serve under power of a Governmental act.

“I am much impressed with the result of my visit,” said Mr. Day yesterday. “Not only with large producers.”

Weiss Bros. Bid for Astor

Weiss Bros. are understood to have made an offer of $8,000 for the lease of the Astor theater for a year—but the deal fell through because the theater management asked for cash. They intend to operate the Astor for the first week of Broadway and are now looking for a theater. They say they made an offer to the Metropolitan O. H. but that the theater’s figure of $14,000 a week precluded the closing of any deal.

Brinch Resigns

P. N. Brinch, manager of exchanges for the W. W. Hodkinson Co., has resigned. His plans for the future are undetermined. Brinch was instrumental in organizing the Hodkinson exchange system when the latter’s contract with Pathé expired.

G. E. Johnston, office manager at Hodkinson, has temporarily taken over Brinch’s duties. There has also been a change in division managers. A. W. Smith is no longer with the company and his duties as Eastern sales manager have been taken over by W. F. Seymour, former Central division manager. H. H. Hunt, former branch manager at Cincinnati has assumed Seymour’s old duties while L. M. Knisern is now Southern sales manager.

ducters, but with the smaller ones as well, I have been received with a welcome that much gratifies. And Mr. Hays, whom I have talked to briefly, is much interested in our ideas and we will lunch together shortly to go further into matters.

"I have been much impressed with the result of my visit so far," he continued, "insofar as we have been told by representatives of various companies in Australia that we were exceedingly strict in our censorship. As a matter of fact I have learned since being here that, generally speaking, and along broad lines, we have about the same ideas that generally prevail so far as censorship goes. We are strict, however, with regard to pictures dealing with divorce, because in Australia they still have very definite ideas indeed regarding the question of divorce. But other than this, I think our ideas are about on a par with yours. Others who have this work in hand."

Mr. Day, in explaining the workings of the Australian board, said that when a picture was done, either by him or his associate, and if desired an appeal could be taken from their findings with the chairman of the board. Other than this, however, there is no appeal.

Here are the basics of the Australian laws on censorship:

Objectionable Characteristics As Prescribed By Act of Parliament

No film shall be registered which, in the opinion of the censorship—

a. Is blasphemous, indecent or obscene;

b. Is likely to be injurious to morality, or to encourage or incite to crime;

c. Is likely to be offensive to any ally of Great Britain or
d. Depicts any matter the exhibition of which is undesirable in the public interest.

Objectionable Characteristics As Defined By the Commonwealth Film Censorship

1. Indecent, suggestive or insufficiently dressed.

2. Embraces overstepping the limits of affection, or which would be contrary to propriety in ordinary life.

3. Naked figures.

4. Positions of the actors which are suggestive of sexual passion or desire.

5. Scenes which might be offensive to the religious feeling of any class of the community.

6. Scenes which might be thought sullusive to morality or virtue.

7. Scenes which might be morally harmful, to the young especially, or both sex.

8. Scenes which might seem to encourage or appear to view with indifference, breaches of law, or perpetration of crime.

9. Scenes of brutality or violence.

10. Scenes from which the inference could be drawn that offences against those laws, or rules, or recognized social codes, which govern the relations of the sexes in married and single life, are matters to be overlooked or treated lightly.
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. See along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you struck up.

Using the Stairway

Lansing, Mich.—The Strand has a beautiful marble stairway, that Manager Ellsworth Hamer has a knack of dressing up in effective, decorative style. He used it to good advantage with “Smilin’ Through” and then followed up with a splendid drop display for “One Arabian Night.” He had a certain effect of a Mecca background a cutout of Pola Negri before it. Just how the bronze statue of Buddha in the foreground fitted in he didn’t explain; but it added a picturesque touch and no one object.

The plush curtains and velvet pillows added a rich effect that was in keeping with the atmosphere Manager Hamer created for the picture.

Playing the Dog

Boston—Manager Morriss of the Orpheum, played upon the fact that Richard Barthelmess, the dog, Waggles enjoys almost as great fame as the star himself. When he played “Sonny” he bought a collie who was a double for Waggles and offered the pup as the prize in a lucky number idea.

The contest was staged through the auspices of the Advertising with its 400,000 circulation. The pup cost the Orpheum $18 and brought in 150 inches of free space in addition to word of mouth publicity and photographs of the winning girl with the dog.

At the same time the picture was exploited by a “Mother and Son” campaign, special inducements being offered to mothers and sons who came together to see the picture.

“Rich Men’s Wives” is the feature, other screen numbers including “Such Is Life in Busy London,” a Hy Myers Travelogue, “Western Stuff,” a Jack Eaton Sport Review, and the customary news reel. The overture to Suppe’s “Poet and Peasant” is rendered by the orchestra at the start and there is another overture by Tchaikovsky, “Mephisto Waltz,” from “Rigoletto,” sung by Louis Rouza, baritone. Selections from Herbert’s “Mike Modeste” are also played by the orchestra after the feature, while the ballet offering is “The Flapper” which Doris Nilde dances.

Rialto

Rodolph Valentino in “Blood and Sand” which is in its third week at the Rivoli, is also here for a week, and at the other house, a Spanish spirit is reflected in the rest of the program. Alexia Chabrier’s “Spanish” is the overture, while following it is “Scenes of Spain.” Ruggerio Bardiqchi sings Bussi Peccia’s “Lolita” after which the feature is flashed on the screen, “Trovador Narveson’s “Gypsy Dance” is played by Michael Leonoff on the violin and closing is a cartoon number.

Picttires Held Over

At the Strand Gay Bates Post in “The Masquerader” remains for a second week; John Barrymore in “Sherlock Holmes” is still at the Cameo; Rodolph Valentino in “Blood and Sand” holds sway at the Rivoli; “Human Hearts” occupies the big light position at the Central; “The Prisoner of Zenda” has run over at the Regent; “Forget Me Not” is at the Criterion’s feature; “Monte Cristo” goes into its second week at the 44th St., and “Nero” will wind up its stay at the Lyric Aug. 15.

Washington—When the conference measure, it is expected that both the House and Senate rates which will have to be ag-

Senate practically rewrote this para-

based upon the foreign valuation.

As passed by the Senate it levies a valorem for positive film is changed to a rate of one cent per linear foot.

The House provided that upon the importation of a film, or film negatives, regardless of country of origin and exposed in a foreign country by an American producer operating legally abroad, in the course of its production, a rate of a picture of which 60% or more was to be made in the United States, a duty of 25% ad valorem would be assessed, but that the rate was to be changed to one cent per linear foot by the Senate.

A rate of 35% ad valorem, based upon foreign application, was fixed by the House for photographic and projection lenses; this class of lenses, however, is not specified in the Senate.

A given rate of 45% ad valorem, based upon the foreign valuation, was fixed by the Senate. The Senate also reduced from 35% to 25% the rate on film for incandescent electric light bulbs and lamps, with or without filaments, but increased from 35% to 40% the rate on cur-avale the film on carbons and electrodes.

When the Senate threw out the House valuation provision of the measure it inserted in lieu of these certain so-called "flexible tariff" provisions, the bill will be reduced in the cost of production at home and abroad, he may increase or reduce the rate of duty, but not exceed 50% of the rates fixed in the Act. He may, however, transfer an article from the dutiable list to the free list or vice versa, or change the time of duty from specific to ad valorem. Further, when it is provided in the bill that the duty shall not exceed a specified ad valorem rate, no rate proclaimed by the President under these flexible tariff provisions may exceed the rate so fixed.
For the purpose of meeting unfair methods of competition and unfair acts in the importation of merchandise, the President may order the importation of merchandise, the President may order the assessment of an ad valuation, not exceeding be less than 10% of the value of the merchandise, which will offset such unfair methods or acts. He is also authorized to take retaliatory action against foreign government which

Crowds lined up at Chicago Theatre

1,000 waiting in line for box office to open

“Biggest Opening in History”

Read Balaban and Katz’s Wire

“The Masquerader” opened to the biggest Monday in the history of Chicago theatre, with thermometer registering 94 and terrific heat all day. Crowds lined up one hour before opening of box office. When we started to sell tickets we had at least 1,000 people waiting in line to get in. First time this happened in the history of any of our theatres in Chicago. Picture a sensation.”

Richard Walton Tully

presents a picture made famous by six years’ road showing to record crowds in every city, town and hamlet.

Few men in the business are better known than Alfred Weiss, who has been closely identified with the industry for the past 17 years. Because of his experience he was selected to secure the Goldwyn branch offices when that company was launched in 1917. Previous to his connection with Goldwyn he occupied important executive positions with Triangle and also operated his own exchange for five years. It is understood Weiss will take a trip to Europe and that after his return his future plans will be announced.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor has the over, and along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

A Unique Herald
Pittsburgh—Bonds issued by the Olympic were gilt-edged in so far as exhibitors were concerned. “The Bandit” (Continued) was concerned. Bill Robson, Paramount exploiter, got up novelty heralds which had external aspects of legal paper, with the familiar borders and other such superflities. It was folded into three parts and the middle section of the outside contained the title and date lines. The word “Bonded” was slightly lifted by larger type help the illusion along. The inside section contained advertising matter illustrated by a press-book mat head of Betty Compson.

The Veil Got Them
Beatrice, Neb.—A new angle to the harem impersonation on “One Arabian Night” was given by Mrs. C. M. Watson in having the veiled figure on the street giving away cars on the picture. The novelty lay in the fact that the veil covered not only the eyes but the entire face as well. The impersonator was grotesquely garbed and that coupled with the veil well aroused interest. Another reason for the curiosity was that from the form and clothing, it was impossible to determine whether the harem artist was a man or woman until a glance at the delicately formed fingers and the diamond sparkler on the left hand gave away the secret. The veil bore the title of the film, incidentally.

Spanish Spirit Here
Spanish atmosphere and an art gallery of stills is featuring the Rivoli lobby for "Blood and Sand." John C. Flinn and Louis Gardy in charge of the exploitation have given a brilliant yellow and red flash to the house. These Spanish national colors proved to be a very successful attention-getting combination. A bull-shaped framework of wire was fastened midway up the front and was covered with red and yellow bunting. Streamers in the two colors flowed down to the marquee. The under side of the marquee was hung with American and Spanish flags. Flinn followed by taking out almost all the art posters which usually occupy the frames and substituted 136 stills. The foyer is also hung with red and yellow bunting, which decorated as well the dead radiators, for which the management certainly had no use this summer. A copy of a Spanish newspaper with headlines over a bull light, stories were also shown. Two large heads of bulls were hung on the walls to complete the display.

United Suiting Spokane Exhibitors
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Spokane—United Artists is working against Ray Grombacher and Liberty Amusement Co., for $27 to compel the latter to play contra which, it is alleged, they repudiated has been set for Sept. 11. A suit already been filed against O. P. of the Liberty, Hillsboro, Ore., it is alleged, gave his check for "Down East," then stopped payn and refused to play the picture.

Three New Paramount Exploits
Claud Saunders, director of exploitation for Famous Players, announed the appointment of Russell R. Mc. D. H. Finke, and Harry C. Eask to the exploitation staff.

Moon has been assigned to New Haven territory, succeed Fred E. Walters, who has been transferred to Indianapolis. Pin has been sent to Albany, Eng., formerly accessories manager of the exchange at Seattle, and has been in charge of the exploitation in Po-land and Seattle.

Minnesota Exhibitors Determine to Secure Lower Prices from First National

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

MINNEAPOLIS—Minnesota exhibitors were determined to secure some sort of price reduction from Associated First National. The matter is being intensively discussed at the convention now in session here.

In this connection a recent statement given to Greater Amusement is, perhaps, more than usual significance.

"One instance which has been brought to our organization’s attention serves as an illustration of the methods First National intends to employ this year. This exhibitor, when told that he would not be served with any of the company’s new pictures until he had played all franchise pictures issued to date, informed the company that he was willing

Summer Vacations Prevent Replies from Many Important Executives Who Were Asked for Opinions Regarding the Steel Corp. Wage Advance

Leading members of President Harding’s Cabinet, including Secretary of Commerce Hoover, Attorney General Daugherty and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, as well as many Senators and Congressmen are emphatic in their belief that the recent wage advance to-day laborers of the U. S. Steel Corp. indicates an era of real prosperity this fall.

Telegrams were forwarded by the FILM DAILY to almost 200 Captains of Industry and important executives throughout the country, but replies indicated that most of them were on their summer vacations and could not be reached by their organizations for information. Among these were Thomas H. Lamont, of J. P. Morgan & Co.; P. A. Franklin, of the International Mercantile Marine; Julius Rosenwald, of the big mail order firm of Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Albert Lasker, of the U. S. Shipping Board and also president of Lord & Thomas of Chicago; Frank A. Vanderlip, formerly president of the National City Bank, and many others.

Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad said that he had no opinion to express for publication regarding the wage advance of the Steel Corp.

Booked at Capitol

Two Paramount Pictures Go Into Big House in October—Lengthy Runs Responsible

An unusual booking has been made in the placing of two Paramount pictures in the Capitol theater for October showing. The pictures are "The Old Homestead" and "To Have and to Hold," two productions with Famous Players officials consider important in their first forty-one for 1922-1923.

The fact that the Capitol has booked these pictures is a direct result of the long runs given other product of that company at the Rialto and Rivoli. It will be recalled that Paramount officials planned to show something like 17 of the first group pre-release on Broadway before the new season actually opened. John C. Flinn was temporarily relieved of other duties pertaining to Famous Players theater activities to devote all of his time to the exploitation of these pictures. "Blood and Sand" is

The production department at Famous had no knowledge of the above report yesterday.
Cabinet Members, Legislators and Business Men Very Optimistic

A most interesting view is that of H. R. Mallinson, president of the big silk concern of that name, who said: "Business is going to be what business man makes it and no more but if it is to be a healthy business it is already better with the leaders that have the nerve to look forward instead of backward.

"Ford's views as to the outlook published some time ago, indicated that he was optimistic but as is well known, he is a true prophet to the situation, currency situation, coinage, etc. He has always been an exponent of good wages.—Ed. Note.

Official Washington Optimistic

(Exclusive to THE FILM DAILY)

A percolating prosperity is indicated by Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, who, in an exclusive interview with a representative of THE FILM DAILY, expressed the opinion that the increased wages currently enjoyed by the steel corporation shows that business realizes this fact and is making preparations accordingly.

"When the railroad and coal strikes are settled, and fuel production and transportation settle down to a steady basis, there will undoubtedly be a demand for steel products," said Secretary Hoover. "The fact that there is employment for all who desire it will, in itself, be an indication of the prosperity that will ensue."

Active mills and factories, said the Secretary, are the best basis of prosperity and the only one on which a real and lasting prosperity can be founded.

A shortage of labor with the prosperity that always accompanies a period in which there is plenty of work for all looms in the near future, according to Attorney General Daugherty, according to the preceding announcement of the steel corporation, in increasing wages. The attorney general pointed out that when the railroad and coal strikes did there will be a great shortage of labor, as the country works desperately to make up for the loss in production, which will thus be increased, and that with everybody working there will naturally ensue a period of good shortages. On which he believed would be a serviceable condition for sometime to come.

 Wage increases in the steel industry indicates the Government believes that resumption of normal rail movement will be followed by increased demands, according to Secretary of Commerce. When the rail strike is settled, wall be another indication of the prosperity of the rail and iron industry, it was pointed out, and that the increase of wages of the steel workers is due to the fact that the corporation considers their present level inadequate and, therefore, has increased them to a higher point.

The way to solution to bring to us great prosperity in this country is a well known. We are in the midst of a bumper crop of harvests this year, which means a very prosperous year for all of us, but it is not all that we can do. We must also look towards the future and see that we are building for the future. We must also look towards the future and see that we are building for the future. We must also look towards the future and see that we are building for the future. We must also look towards the future and see that we are building for the future. We must also look towards the future and see that we are building for the future. We must also look towards the future and see that we are building for the future.

Representative Thomas A. Cha-
er, of Okla., told: "I think that the prosperity of the new bill will give us better markets for all of our produce and prosperity not only in the state but every other industry presages a resumption of operations generally with a market profit from the outlooks of foreign and manufacturers. With the wheels in the factories and industries again rolling it evident that the Steel Corporation is in the right for prosperity in the years to come—prosperity as in my judgment.

Representative Carl R. Chindbom, of Indiana, said: "If the United States Steel Corporation is willing to keep its payroll $50,000 lower than it is, it is an indication that prosperity is coming, because many of the leading industries are founded on steel and the steel industry will not boom in less than it is necessary to speed up production.

keep the other industries going. I am sure that the action of the Steel Corporation is indicative of big times ahead.

Representative Frederick H. Gillett, Speaker of the House of Representatives, "I have felt that the country for some months has been on the verge of a great business boom and all that has delayed it has been the strike. As soon as that disturbing feature is out of the way I believe the industrial prosperity will immediately advance. The recent wage increases of the United States Steel Corporation is a symptom of this prosperity.

Representative Frank W. Mondell, of Wyoming, Republican Floor Leader of the House: "The action of the Steel Corporation in increasing wages would seem to indicate that the officials of that corporation are in harmony with what seems to be the general sentiment throughout the country that the settlement of the coal and railroad strikes would bring a period of industrial revival and activity. The time seems to be ripe for a renewal of normal conditions of industry. Hence, the importance of a settlement at the earliest possible date of the strikes now in progress is evident."

Representative Harold Knutson, of Minn.: "The voluntary increase of 20 per cent granted by the United States Steel Corp. to its employees convinces me more than any other one thing that we have definitely turned the corner and are now on the highway to general prosperity."

Representative George W. Ed-mounds, of Pa.: "It is very evident that the United States Steel Corp. with their facilities for securing information all over the world recognizes that the turn in the tide has come and the dull times occasioned by the reaction after the late war are now at a finish. This should be condered as a broad view by a great corporation of the prosperity we are now reaching."

In the Courts

Leopold Singer who filed a judgment against William M. Pizor and Herman Gluckman obtained the judgment by default when the defendants failed to answer the suit. After the filing of the judgment, the defendants asked that it be re-opened and that they be given an opportunity to file an answer. The defendants explained that they did not obtain sufficient evidence in time to file a verified answer but that since the judgment was given for the plaintiff they had obtained the evidence. This motion by Pizor and Gluckman was later withdrawn and there was filed in the Supreme Court and signed by Justice O'Malley, a stipulation between attorneys for both sides who agreed that the judgment should be set aside and vacated without costs to either of the parties.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......... 6,500 feet

“Rich Men’s Wives” the first of the Al Lichtman Corp. releases, looks like a pretty nice picture. The story is old, hackneyed, well worn and well proven. It seems a pity that a pair of clever writers like Frank Dazey and his very capable wife could not have found something better for Gasnier. But this is sure—they took no chances. All the old, sure fire stuff, the kind that never failed to get them to the box office, is there. They took Formula 816 and unwrapped the abandoned wife of the stage millionaire. They took out Formula 123 and brought in the cute youngster who always gets the hearts of the women in the audience. They took out Formula 113 and brought the well dressed willun out and as usual he was too poor to demand marriage of the other man’s wife, “but they were intended for each other.” And a few more of these stock ideas and rounded up the picture sweet and pretty and let it go at that.

Gasnier, with this thin sort of a story, has done very well, indeed. He has taken some incidents and built them to a point where they contain a very certain wallop that is bound to have its effect upon any audience. For instance when the rich man’s wife is compromised, and ordered to leave her home, she yearns for a sight of her little boy, who, in turn, has been told she is dead. One night she visits the home, the boy toddles downstairs, and through the glass of the front door, they kiss and exchange loving glances—the kiddie thinking it is the spirit of his mother. This has been done very well indeed. And again towards the finish when the agonized mother takes her boy out of the fountain where he is posing as Cupid to the social revellers, this is sure fire in its appeal.

But as a whole human beings, even socially elect, never live or behave as they are presented. The atmosphere is false, the characters are impossible and a lot of people will want to know what on earth happens to the family of the girl after she is married—and you see none of the love making leading to the marriage. The cast is good but Claire Windsor has been poorly photographed at times. House Peters hasn’t enough to do to worry about and the star of the production is the youngster. Production values are excellent.

Talk About the Cute Kiddie and Mention Gasnier’s Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You had better see this one. It has a lot of good stuff in it for the box office and this appeal may easily offset the lack of story values. There is enough sure fire hokum to make them like it, and while it is hokum, if you bank on the mother love appeal and tell of the very clever youngster it is likely to more than please the average audience. If, on the other hand, your people do not care for social dramas then think it over.

You can talk about Gasnier, and tell of some of his past successes. Also tell them that he made “Kismet.” Many will recall this even if they have forgotten the name of his more recent successes. You can talk of the production value and also of the cast, many of the names being well known to your patrons.

DIRECTION: Fair, missed a few points. Several dramatic scenes well handled

PHOTOGRAPHY: Careless at times, failing to handle star to best advantage

LIGHTINGS: At times too harsh

STAR: Has several strong dramatic moments

SUPPORT: Good. Gladys Hulette hasn’t enough to do as a flapper, Robert Fraser satisfies as hero and Charles Lane has good part

EXTERIORS: Few INTERIORS: Excellent

DETAIL: Generally adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY: Girl sacrifices rich suitor who endows her operatic career to marry poor composer

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION: 5,300 feet

While at times there is so much melodrama in the story of Izola Forrester that has been made into “How Women Love” as the first of the Betty Blythe specials, taken all in all in this looks like a pretty good piece of material for the state rights market. There is a good production, Betty Blythe wears some stunning gowns and if the idea of having her appear as a special attraction is worked out there is a good chance for her to break in on the picture in the opera sequence and get away with it.

Good Title Should Help a Lot Attracting Them to the Box Office

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Where they like society dramas and aren’t critical about whether or not the situations are strong or forcefully handled, you will be able to satisfy them with “How Women Love.” Incidentally, the best bet in connection with this production, is the title. It is an unusually strong one for the box office and should prove to have a fine drawing power. Properly exploited you should not have much trouble bringing them in on the strength of the title and the star’s name.

Tell them is is the story of a singer who sacrificed a career to be with the man she loved. The usual teaser lines would do to arouse interest. Post them prior to announcing the title and then follow them up with conspicuous signs of the title and star’s name. The average crowd will probably accept it but if you cater to a critical patronage, they may find fault. In this case you might see it for yourself first.
A boost to 2,196,580 potential patrons!

What the critics of 16 powerful newspapers said about

"RICH MEN'S WIVES"

Los Angeles Times:
"This is not often, if ever, been turned into a production more powerful or artistic. A concentration of purpose and unity of effect all too rare in cinema drama. A sensitiveness amounting, at times, almost to genius. Touches like tying balloon and moment where mother and child meet on opposite sides of locked door are unforgettable."

Los Angeles Examiner:
"It is necessary to type down a few adjectives of praise, when one meets with an emotional performance as stirring as Claire Windsor's; sharply sincere, pleasantly free from ranting, interestingly intense."

Los Angeles Express:
"Claire Windsor plays with a sincerity, an understanding and finish that seem quite inspired. A gripping and effective drama. Director touches lightly upon comedy relief and achieves a vividness that stamps the production as a fine piece of cinematic work."

Los Angeles Herald:
"Replete with thrills and teeming with human interest of the kind that can make better the best of us. A completely finished play of a type that are too few and far between for the good of the motion picture industry."

New York World:
"* * * Engaged a particularly capable cast of players, constructed beautiful and dignified settings and injected originality and taste in its atmospheric background, even to the subtitles."

Morning Telegraph:
"Claire Windsor as the wife is very appealing. Then who could resist the child played by that adorable baby Richard Headrick? Settings, gowns, and photography all remarkably pleasing."

The Sun:
"* * * Excellent picture. * * * Those who love the sensation of laughing and crying simultaneously will find that little Richard Headrick gives them the opportunity. * * * The photography was excellent, some night scenes on the seashore being of unusual beauty."

New York Telegram:
"The cast is prodigal in the matter of beauty. * * * The story is an absorbing drama of today."

Daily News:
"Mr. Gasnier's most masterful scene was the one where the distracted mother, barred at the gates, sees only her boy's balloon, as, tied to a string, it shows above the tree tops. And a genuinely touching moment was the meeting of mother and son at the barrier of the window pane."

New York Globe:
"There is an atmosphere of opulence but it is very artistically and even sparingly applied. * * * Claire Windsor does some real acting as the wife."

New York Mail:
"Louis Gasnier, who directed it, displays the touch of his genius at many points in the progress of the film. There are numerous extremely well done episodes which reveal Gasnier at his best."

San Francisco Chronicle:
"A sumptuous picture, Has beautiful women, good-looking men and much good acting. Peters gives the husband fine dignity and plays with splendid reserve. Claire Windsor does excellent emotional work."

San Francisco Examiner:
"Cast ideally chosen, the sets uncommonly realistic."

San Francisco Bulletin:
"There is a big scene, which is bound to appeal to the sympathies of everyone—no matter how hardened. It is in this scene Claire Windsor reaches top notch emotional work; it is about the best thing she has ever done."

Oakland Tribune:
"Without doubt one of the greatest society dramas ever filmed. It convinces with straight, full arm punches. No better acting has been seen here for months."

Paterson Morning Call:
"Thousands wept at the heartrending scene, where the neglected child cries desperately to reach its mother and, in one final effort, the latter daringly steals her way into the home that was once hers, only to be left away, broken-hearted, wronged. * * * Paterson has been fortunate in the past in seeing scores of great screen productions, but few can compare with 'Rich Men's Wives.' * * * It is one of those truly great pictures that come only every now and then. * * * The cast headed by Claire Windsor is remarkable. * * *"

SCENARIO BY ............... Hope Loring
CAMERAMAN ................ William Fildew

AS A WHOLE ...... Rapidly moving drama shifting to exotic locale that affords fine outdoor atmosphere

STORY ...... Offers several interesting situations and gives Stuart Holmes many opportunities for his villainy DIRECTION ...... Satisfactory; has kept the various twists well in hand; more detail might have helped in places; climax is effective

PHOTOGRAPHY ................ Very good
LIGHTINGS ................. Adequate
PLAYERS ...... Gladys Brockwell handles her role well; Mahlon Hamilton has little to do as hero; good cast includes Kate Price, Edna Murphy and others

EXTERIORS .................. Excellent
INTERIORS ................. Well staged
DETAIL ...... Comedy relief provided by stout servant and shots of a monkey are of value

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Blackmailer and woman whose happiness he has marred reach island where he suffers usual penalty for continued crime

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 4,920 feet

A multiplicity of situations and possibilities for thrilling episodes have been offered by the author and to a certain extent, they have been used to good advantage in “Paid Back.” Having the heroine sail for a small and distant island with a lustful and treacherous man where she intends to keep him prisoner, his subsequent wooing of an innocent maid and the other points leading up to his well-deserved death make up an entertaining production.

Gladys Brockwell in her featured role performs in good style and should please those who have liked her in the past, while Stuart Holmes as the prime bad man causes one to dislike him most heartily. He takes part, incidentally, in a very effective climax. The hand in the darkness, feebly waving him out and his ultimate death in the stream after he has been stricken by the pestilence, while a trifle ghastly, hold attention.

What is really the strongest feature of this production is its outdoor locale which is pleasing to the eye. The various island scenes are refreshing, having been shot in a manner which does not detract from their natural beauty and the tropical night scenes are good to behold. It is regrettable that the romance between Gladys Brockwell and Mahlon Hamilton was not brought to its climax more gradually but in its entirety, this is likely to hold its own.

Story: Society woman, placed in embarrassing position by blackmailer, is spurned by her husband directly after marriage through the misunderstanding. She goes to a small island with the villain whom she makes prisoner. He continues on his ungodly way, winning the affection of an innocent maid, but his treacherous plan is nipped and he is punished for his sins in customary fashion. The heroine meanwhile, meets the man she loves and there is the expected happy fadeout.

Use Names, Teaser Lines and Tropical Lobby Display

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It should not be difficult to exploit this. To begin with, the names of Gladys Brockwell, Stuart Holmes and Mahlon Hamilton can be used to draw those who know them. They are familiar to many fans and their work in this will not be disappointing.

A teaser campaign can easily be worked into the advertising, for the primary angle of the production—the situation which places the two leading performers on the island has several aspects that can be played up to advantage. Catchlines about the woman cast aside by her husband just after the marriage ceremony, the philandering villain and the heroine who sacrificed wealth to punish the latter, should attract notice.

Stills showing bits of the tropical island can be used in a lobby display. If the weather should be cool when you get this, palms and a miniature grass hut placed before the entrance together with other suitable accessories will make passers-by stop for closer inspection.

CAMERAMAN ................... Marcel Le Picard
AS A WHOLE............ Likely to be a good box office number for many exhibitors; has good audience appeal but is not a high class entertainment STORY............. Covers a pretty large variety of situations; some familiar melodramatic twists DIRECTION.........Satisfactory for the most part; uses extras in awkward fashion occasionally; holds off surprise ending very well
 PHOTOGRAPHY ................. All right
 LIGHTINGS ............. Usually good; night exteriors need darker tinting PLAYERS....... Principals well known; Virginia Pearson, Harry Morey, Julia Swayne Gordon, Joseph Striker, Mary Anderson, Thurston Hall and Bobby Connelly
 EXTERIORS ..................... Suitable
 INTERIORS ............ Appropriate
 DETAIL ................. Titles poor
 CHARACTER OF STORY..... Girl, marrying broker for spite, learns he has a wife. He is killed, the wife acquitted and the lovers reunited
 LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ... About 7,000 feet

To a good majority of audiences "Wildness of Youth" is likely to prove a fine entertainment and there are exhibitors who will probably find it a first rate box office number. It all depends upon the class of patronage they cater to. It is a good all around melodrama that contains a fairly prominent audience appeal that will give it a favorable reception with the right crowd. It is not a high class entertainment, however, and will hardly be agreeably received by a high class clientele.

The production does show a more serious attempt upon the part of the producer to make something worth while and both in direction and in the selection of a cast there is a considerable improvement over some previous releases. The story is somewhat involved, but, on the whole, easy to follow and with one or two new titles it would be even better. One instance is where a title reads to the effect that one of the characters has been ill for four months. The lapse of time is not explained until after and causes a confusion in the mind of the spectator for the time being. It would be well to insert a title prior to the trial scene indicating that four months had elapsed. This would not hurt the surprise ending that the director has been holding for the finale.

Abramson has handled the players satisfactorily, especially the principals and the cast is a good one. Some of the scenes in which extras are used are a trifle awkward, as, for instance, that in which the guests at a party all run out into the garden to witness an argument between the host, one of the guests and her lover.

Virginia Pearson returns to the screen after an absence of three years. She hasn't very much to do until the close of the picture when she has a good dramatic bit. Joseph Striker is a good hero and little Bobby Connelly, who died recently, is a pleasing youngster. Mary Anderson makes a good deal of the flapper heroine.

Story: Jule Grayton decides to marry James Surbrun when she quarrels with her lover, Andrew. Andrew forges a check belonging to Surbrun to defray expenses for an operation on a little boy who was injured while attempting to save Andrew's life. Surbrun is killed and Andrew accused. How the mother of the boy comes forward and admits she murdered Surbrun who had deserted her years before, is interestingly told.

Should Prove A Good Box Office Number If You Have the Right Crowd

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is undoubtedly the best box office attraction that Abramson has made recently and in other respects as well, "Wildness of Youth" is a better picture than some of his previous releases. There is a good melodramatic story, logically told, and smooth running, with a well sustained interest and a first rate surprise ending. Then there is a well chosen cast with several prominent players.

It is the right picture for the right house and with a crowd that demands just such situations as those offered here, it should prove highly acceptable. If it's what they want, let them have it. Use the players names and catchlines in connection with the title.
Latest Leah Baird Offering Fairly Satisfactory

INTERIORS .................................Up to standard DETAIL ..............................Well handled CHARACTER OF STORY........Particularly good for neighborhood houses
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 6,000 feet

With a particularly attractive title “When Husbands Deceive,” Leah Baird’s latest offering measures up satisfactorily.

Miss Baird wrote the story and scenario, so this can be taken as an indication that this is the type of work which she likes to do. There is very little new in the story excepting a particularly good twist in which a Great Dane comes to the rescue of his mistress.

It is the old story of a girl, who, finding the man she loves is guilty of theft, turns to her guardian who is supposed to love her and becomes his wife. Eventually she discovers all this was a trick for her guardian to secure her money and the end finds the lovers united in the inevitable clutch.

The Great Dane is used splendidly to defend his mistress from an attack by her husband and you know from the clever manner in which it is handled that the man dies from the dog’s attack, although the actual death is not shown. This is very good direction and exceedingly effective. Perhaps it would have been better had there been a greater use of the dog in the earlier portion of the picture, although this may be easily overlooked by a majority of picture goers. There is also a cute monkey, the pet of the unhappy wife, who is responsible for playing around the husband’s safe and throwing all over the library floor the various papers and stolen bonds, which gives her the clue that her husband has not only been conspiring to wreck her happiness, but also to secure her property. The entire incident where this develops is well done and sure fire audience material.

Jack Mower appears as the lover, who is tricked into a position where he is apparently a thief and is very satisfactory. William Conklin has the part of the deceiving husband. Enidie Jensen has very little to do as an adventuress. But Mack Sennett’s Great Dane, Teddy, is worthy of notice. Production values are good.

Use Star’s Name and Do Not Forget Teddy, the Great Dane

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can book this without much trouble. First, because the title is attractive; secondly, Miss Baird is fairly well, if not very well known in your community, and it is a sort of story women will like even though it is light in structure. You can play up and also use in your lobby display stills showing Miss Baird with Mack Sennett’s Great Dane, Teddy. You can use catch-lines of the way the Great Dane comes to his mistress’ rescue, and if there are any stills of this by all means get them. You can also talk about the clever little monkey and a catch line something like this might help: “See how a Great Dane and a wonderful monkey save a wife from a husband’s deceit” or “Can you imagine a little monkey and a Great Dane completely upsetting the plans of a villainous husband.” “See When Husbands Deceive” at the Blank theater.”

If your crowd likes spectacular stunts like cabarets, you can point out that there is a rather daring fountain dance presented; and do not overlook the fact that Wallace Worsley the director is well known and has made a number of popular pictures.

CHARACTER OF STORY........... Convict breaks jail to find his daughter and deal out justice overlooked by law.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 5,147 feet

Since the success of "The Miracle Man" and "The Penalty" Lou-Chaney seems doomed to play the role of make-believe cripples. In "Flesh and Blood" Chaney has another role of this type. He takes the part of an escaped convict who disguises himself as a cripple. While the story is full of incident and character it contains very little action. To make up for this you have melodrama and some nice bits of characterization.

The interest is held throughout in spite of the morbid circumstances depicted. The star plays the part of the girl's father who hides himself from the police and also his identity from the girl. A good deal of mystery is created by the Chinatown settings and the underworld characters who shield the convict while he accomplishes his purpose. The police are ever on his trail and in this way a good deal of suspense is created.

The director has succeeded in building up a good deal of atmosphere and creating a lot of suspense. He has done more too; he has made an ordinary story interesting. Careful attention has been given to detail and facial expression to convey the required emotion. Some of these close-ups are a little long and could with advantage be trimmed. A little editing all around would help speed up the production and remove the slow moments.

Supporting the star are De Witt Jennings and Noah Beery. Beery plays the role of the Chinese doctor who shields the convict from the police. Ralph Lewis does an interesting character role while the boy and the girl in the story are played by Jack Mulhall and Edith Roberts.

The story begins with the convict breaking jail. He finds shelter from the police in Chinatown. After traveling over the roofs of buildings he reaches his old home in time to see the funeral of his wife and catch a glimpse of his daughter. His desire to watch over his daughter leads him to assume the guise of a cripple, while in the meantime he seeks the rich man who was the real criminal. The girl loves the rich man's son and for the happiness of his daughter he tears up the confession which he has forced the rich man to sign. The picture ends with the convict returning to jail of his own free will.

Use Star's Name and Mention Former Successes

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The star's name and some of his former successes like "The Miracle Man" and "The Penalty" are your best talking points. The picture is not of the cheerful kind but will hold the attention of your audience and entertain the great majority.

Mention the underworld atmosphere and show them stills of Lon Chaney in his role of the cripple. It might also be a good idea to run a trailer a week or so before the picture. Show one of the parts where Chaney discards his crutches and straightens out his legs.

Play up the Chinatown scenes. If you are in the habit of using catchlines then something like this might help attract: "He escaped prison to prove his innocence but returned to save the happiness of his own 'Flesh and Blood.'" A lobby hung with lanterns giving a Chinatown effect will also help attract.

CHARACTER OF STORY ..............Poor girl placed in wealthy surroundings with her true identity concealed encounters blackmailer and has mental struggle as to honesty
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .............5,905 feet

Novelists and film producers have been using for many years the basic situation of the poor girl placed in wealthy circumstances, her true identity hidden, with a subsequent struggle against detection. A new angle is all that anyone may expect. In this, however, they have failed to provide the element of novelty in the story material, the locale and the handling. The script calls for scenes showing the struggle of the poor heroine; they have her discharged from her office and refused work by a familiar type of screen farmer with the usual beard on the tip of his chin. Through it all, bothersome details are disposed of with subtitles.

When the man who knew the heroine in the past appears and recognizes her, does the aristocratic matron suspect anything? No. She tells the young man to attend to the business at hand. In the case of the clearing up of matters, is the villain punished as promised? Well, they tell you so in some titles, but there is nothing aside from that to show it. And when the reprobate accosts the kindly old woman who shouts for help, the group nearby wait until the evil-doer has tossed a heavy curtain over her head, looked around, broken out and escaped. After that, they trot leisurely to the rescue.

Suspense is furnished in the scenes where the paralyzed woman names the individual who brought about her condition and there is a bit of tension as to what course the heroine will pursue. Some of it has been unduly prolonged. Fortunately, there are some charming exterior bits which will prove pleasing and add to the value of the offering.

Story: Accident enables girl of ordinary means to establish herself in a wealthy household. A blackmailer appears and threatens exposure. There is a psychological combat with regard to her telling the truth with love on the part of the woman who has accepted her and a romance with a young doctor developing at the finish.

Indicate the Nature of the Story and Use Catchlines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

What will probably be the safest and wisest course will be to explain in the advertising what this concerns. Such lines as "He knew her secret," "What is the true value of honesty in such a predicament?" indicating the position in which the heroine finds herself, and others similar will in all likelihood attract notice. Stimulate curiosity and at the same time let them know what sort of a film it is.

The title is apt to create the impression that this is some sort of an outdoor story of a battle with the elements and it would be wise to post them on that point, so as not to mislead. This can readily be accomplished by placing stills in advantageous places.

It is well worth remembering that there are some exceedingly pleasant exterior shots, stills of which will look well in the lobby.

Action and Love Interest in Pleasing Western

"THE SAGE BRUSH TRAIL"
Western Pictures Exploitation Co.—State Rights
DIRECTOR .................. Robert T. Thornby
AUTHOR .................. H. H. Van Loan
SCENARIO BY .................. Not credited
CAMERAMAN .................. Harold Janes
AS A WHOLE.......Western with action, suspense and romance that will prove pleasing to followers of this type of production

STORY .......... Has all of the elements that have thrilled them in the past DIRECTION ........ Material has been treated in a manner that holds attention until the end
PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Good
LIGHTINGS ................. Acceptable
PLAYERS ............ Roy Stewart a forceful character; Marjorie Daw charming; Wallace Beery a snearing villain; Johnny Walker up to the mark
EXTERIORS ................. Excellent
INTERIORS .............. Satisfactory
DETAIL .................. Good
CHARACTER OF STORY ........... Sheriff facing problem of duty versus love finds supposed rival is heroe's brother and apprehends real criminal

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

Although most of the situations used in this wester have been employed successfully before, they have been woven about a theme that maintains interest throughout and the director has made much of his material. The result is a production which can be depended upon to please those who like this variety of drama, for it has all of the desired elements—there is gun play, a strong love theme, some mystery which is nicely sustained and a leering Mexican bandit in a hand-to-hand encounter with the hero.

Roy Stewart, Marjorie Daw, Wallace Beery and Johnny Walker, who comprise practically the entire cast, all perform in a commendable manner. Stewart is vigorous, while Marjorie Daw's petite figure and pretty countenance furnish a pleasant contrast to the rugged aspect of the rest of the film. Beery grins and seowals alternately after the most approved fashion for bad men from across the border, earning unpopularity without difficulty.

As far as the desert atmosphere is concerned, and much of the footage concerns itself with the dry territory, that has been secured in creditable style, and technically this is up to par, although some of the shots have not been lit as well as they might have been. On the whole, it is the sort of stuff western fans will want.

Story: New sheriff starts to clean up a bad town.
The heroine's brother appears and apparently is guilty of a shooting, his innocence and identity remaining unknown for the time. Seeing him in an embrace with the woman he loves, the official is torn by conflicting emotions, finally sending the youth to apparent destruction on the desert. Appealed to by the girl who explains that the fugitive is her brother, he rides out to the rescue. Meanwhile, a Mexican enters the home of the heroine and starts for her. There is a more even struggle when the sheriff returns, everything is cleared up and then a light touch put in at the finish with a ride to the preacher in progress.

Direct Drive at Western Fans, Using Author's Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you cater to patrons who like their drama set in the wild and woolly regions, you may safely book this with the knowledge that they will be satisfied.
Those who demand a large amount of action will find enough shooting and fighting to please them; those who insist upon romance will find that.

H. H. Van Loan's writings have been read extensively and his name is properly played up in the paper on this. You should not neglect to mention his name in any advertising you may decide to do, for it will undoubtedly help to draw. As for the principals, all of them are known, and while you have no outstanding star about whom to build a campaign, they should pull well.

The theme of this will provide you with material for good catchlines. Present to them some of the problems involved and make them guess as to the ultimate unraveling of the tangle. If you care to go in for more than the ordinary plugging, a cowboy street parade or lobby dressed with cactus and other desert adjuncts will prove effective.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill"—Universal
Type of production........................................18 chapter serial

Here is the best historic chapter play that Universal has yet made. It is taken from an epoch making period of American history and records faithfully one of the Nation's biggest crises. There are three centers of activity. The Civil War recording the conflict between the North and the South, Abe Lincoln, his cabinet and enemies, and finally the great opening of the West and the building of the railroad. All three settings work at once and interlock. In all cases history has been quite faithfully recorded and a good deal of credit is due the investigators who drafted the details included in the scenario.

The great appeal in this serial is the historic material. There are plenty of thrills, too, with the usual bad men and savage Indian stuff, but the great interest lies in the historic flashes. Who will not want to see what Lincoln's cabinet looked like? Or how the mother received a pardon for her boy who was sleeping at his post—and how Lincoln received the old lady. What American will not be interested in seeing how Lee surrendered to Grant, and the grand get-up that Grant made when the great Confederate general offered him his sword. And this is by no means all. You see the theater where Lincoln was shot. The details of these scenes are worked out with realism and accuracy. You see the crazed actor, Booth, leap from the box to the stage and you see the death of Lincoln. And through all these historic moments the great railway is forging its way across the continent. Strikes, Indians, highwaymen manage to create a good deal of difficulty but the railway goes on.

The girl and her father find a new home in the west but remain loyal to the Southern states while the hero is a member of the Union army.

Art Acord has the leading hero role and presents some splendid wild west riding and thrills. He is supported by a large and capable cast. Dorothy Woods makes a satisfactory heroine and George A. Williams plays the role of her father.

The part of Buffalo Bill is taken by Duke R. Lee.

There are so many points of appeal in this serial that there should be very little difficulty in putting it over. It is clean, amusing and instructive and will please all types of people.

Make a special appeal through the schools on its historic situations and also appeal directly to the children in your neighborhood through the wild West scenes and Indian stuff. Use the posters and stills and some of the exploitation ideas presented in the press book.

"Screen Snapshots" No. 5—Pathe
Type of production...................................1 reel fan magazine

Tom Mix shows you a few tricks that his horse Tony can do when he is not engaged in a western. At a party given by Bebe Daniels you see many of the shining lights of the screen including Jacqueline Logan, Fred Niblo, Lila Lee, Bessie Love, Claire Windsor, Lois Wilson, Pauline Starke, Buster Keaton and Bull Montana. Jane and Katherine Lee do a little scene together and Theodore Roberts falls asleep at the beach and dreams about bathing girls. The majority of these film folk are well known and their informal appearance will please the average screen fan.

"The Copper Beeches"—Sherlock Holmes—Educational
Type of production................................2 reel drama

Here is another of the splendid series of Adventures of Sherlock Holmes made from the well known stories by Conan Doyle. "The Copper Beeches" follows the story very closely. A governess enlists the aid of the famous detective and tells the story of how she was induced to act as companion to a middle aged lady and her horrible husband. A mystery reigned in the house and a locked door kept its secret. The governess was requested to wear a certain dress and to send away a young man who kept intruding upon the grounds. Holmes and Watson go with the governess to the house and force open the locked door only to find a girl escaping from the window by means of a ladder. When all is explained it is learned that the horrible father had locked up the girl to keep her from eloping with her lover so that he could get hold of her private income. The governess was engaged because she resembled the daughter and was forced to wear the girl's dress and order the young man away. The suspense is great and it is impossible to wholly foretell the ending. This number of Sherlock Holmes is well up to the high standard of the series and will entertain as well as hold the attention of any audience. The drama unravels smoothly and builds up as it goes along. These two reel dramas offer a welcome relief from the over-done westerns and at the same time contain all the necessary elements of entertainment.

"Official Urban Movie Chats" No. 27—Hodkinson
Type of production.................................1 reel magazine

Dr. Royal S. Copehland, New York City's Commissioner of Health, opens this number of the Official Chats with some very good hot weather advice. He tells you how to keep cool and what to eat in hot weather. He also says what should be avoided if you would keep comfortable in Summer. His advice is illustrated in flashes. The second chapter of the magazine is devoted to animals at the zoo. Here you see in turn the wart-hog, elephant, hippo, llama, hyena, ostrich and ant-eater. The third chapter of this magazine takes you on a personally conducted tour to the Grand Canyon in Arizona. The photography is good throughout and the subject matter interesting. This number however contains but three main subjects and lacks the variety of some of the earlier issues of this series.

Western Stuff—Jack Eaton—Weiss Bros.—Goldwyn
Type of production.....................................1 reel sport feature

This is considerably different from the usual type of the sport review which Jack Eaton has been turning out. It consists in the main of the sport of the Far West in the breaking in of bucking bronchos. By far the feature of the reel is the very clever camera work which shows closeups of those exciting moments when the horses buck all over the corral and twist and turn on their riders. That someone wasn't killed during the event is difficult to understand. Certainly the riding race rough enough to satisfy anyone, and the danger ever imminent. Some of the shots have been tinted and look very good. The last two shots really have nothing to do with the reel and might be eliminated to advantage. Very good for any type of house.

Otherwise Connie Talmadge. In “East Is West.” A Chinese love story. That will be worldwide. In its appeal. Best thing Connie has ever done. Biggest production ever offered her. Thanks to brother-in-law Joe. Enough sure fire stuff. To make it appeal anywhere. And with the score. Arranged by Roxy. And the decorations at the Ritz. Friday night. Well, boys. It sure was a triumph. For all the First National crew. All who were there. And smiling. And rejoicing. At what had happened.

MARCUS’ IDEAS

Back on the Berengaria. This week. From London. After giving a start. To “The Four Horsemen.” Marcus Loew. Filled all up. To the brim. With an idea. That will cause a lot of discussion. If nothing else. Among the big producers. Idea is this: Dispose of the old product. Clogging things up. By virtue of block booking. And let England. As well as all other foreign countries. Have the newer. And better pictures.

Over there. They are showing pictures. Two to three years old. As a rule. And everyone. Who knows anything. Knows the improvement made in production. During the past few years. Loew thinks this will help a lot. In bringing business back. In the foreign field. Is sold hard on the idea. In—

Set An Orphans’ Day

League for Women Voters and Industry to Spread Good Cheer to Orphans on Oct. 14

Mrs. Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman of the N. Y. State League for Women Voters and Will H. Hays, joined forces with the women of the State in a campaign which has as its slogan “Make ’Em Happy,” and will culminate with simultaneous performances for orphans in 75 large picture theaters in New York, Buffalo and Albany. Saturday, Oct. 14, has been designated as “Orphans’ Day” and will be so heralded upon screens throughout the State. God-mothers will be provided for these institutional charges.

Among the theaters in New York which are participating in the plan are the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto, Criterion, Strand, the Loew theaters, the Fox theaters and the Moss and Keith theaters.

This joint undertaking is the result of a conference at the Cosmopolitan Club, at which Charles L. O’Reilly, of the Metropolitan Opera,太平, the State Owners of New York City, and Charles Steiner, expressed their willingness to co-operate.

A short film, “Open Arms,” is now being made by Famous Players at its Astoria studio. This distributed gratis, will be exhibited throughout the State in three weeks or to Oct. 14. The campaign is under the joint direction of Mrs. George A. Skinner, for the League, and Lloyd Willis, representing the picture industry.

First there’s Alfred Weiss. Who had more money in his pockets. On Thursday. Than for a long time. Sold his interest in New York. Goldwyn exchanges. To the company. And will tour Europe. Before he settles down again. Has several interests. Other than pictures. And you never can tell. But it’s a good bet. That Alfred will still be. In celluloid circles. So to speak.

Then there’s Al Aronson. Also formerly with Goldwyn. Who has some big ideas. Up a large and comfortable sleeve. And will tell the world all about them. In a day or so. Meanwhile “Busy” insists he’s not going to Vita. Or anywhere else. Although there has been some talk. Of that ‘elsewhere’ position. Hearst will have a sales manager of his own soon. Several years later. But Tom said he and Joe were buddies. And wouldn't give him up. So George finds a lawyer. And Tom for $500 a week to him. Which makes "Joe" some horse.

At the moment. It looks. As if Tom had a horse on George.

SOME RACE PICTURES

Not including "The Birth of a Race." But actual hoss racing pictures. Go back to "Mickey." Then "Checkers," Fox in Aug., 1919. Then "In Old Kentucky," First National, December, 1919. Then there was a little lapse. And in January, 1921. Vitagraph released "Black Beauty." Six months later Fox released "Thunderbolt." And then. Six months later. Came the deluge. Last March Arrow released "Chain Lighting." The next month Goldwyn turned loose "When Romance Rides." Within three weeks of this Fred Warren's American Releasing had "My Old Kentucky Home" out. And R-C set May 14. As release for "Queen o the Turf." That is, if there isn't any "The Kentucky Derby" coming. As well as "The Suburban Handicap." And the Allied Corporation is making ready "Garrison's Finish."

Any more?

BEATING BACK

To his early love. Felix Feist. Who has charge of a national advertising campaign. For Dick Barthelmess' picture, "The Bond-boy." Onto upon a time. A long while ago. As the old fairy stories start. Or should. Felix was in the advertising business. But—well, it isn't fair. To rattle the skeleton. But you can bet. What you like. It'll be good.

Don't Fear Europe

that money there has depreciated less than in other European countries. Italy is making many pictures, fully half of which are spectacles, but the cost is becoming so great that probably the circuit may not be able to handle the American films are shown there. Russia is doing nothing either in production or distributing. Aside from a few German films, taken in exchange for goods, and a rare American film smuggled into the country. In England the American film retains its popularity and conditions have improved as a result of the inroads made on the black and the advance booking systems.

"The film situation in France," said Kam, "is becoming very complicated—up to the government tax and the danger of all motion picture theaters closing up shop on Jan. 1, unless the tax is rescinded, is becoming acute. The producers, distributors and exhibitors are putting up a united front against the tax. At every picture theater, at counting time, a representative of a foreign film is present, at the expense of the exhibitor, to see that receipts are correctly reported. The various exchanges, are tacking 15% on the rental price to raise a sum to care for their expenses. While this unit is trying to do what it can, the situation is bad.

"From a producing standpoint, Germany has improved remarkably. But now, with the war output is not suited to the American market. The Germans are not only interested in films with a lot of attention paid to details—but usually unimportant details. German pictures are not likely to sell to any great extent in the United States; they are gradually making their way into France but the American film is already supreme there. In Italy the general outlook is discouraging, due mainly to the censorship situation. The quality, on the whole, is superior and entails an endless amount of red tape. The theatrical situation there is in the hands of one or two big men and it is difficult, for an outsider to break into the producing or distributing field.

About half a dozen American films were being shown at the time I was in Italy. Twenty-four Goldwyn pictures have been sold for Italian distribution. Italy is producing so much on her own account that the field for American pictures is limited. Despite the fact that so much of the native product is of indifferent quality—about one half being of a spectacular character.

Jrget by Canon Chase—Would Have Six Commissioners Appointed by Secretary of the Interior

Canon William Sheafe Chase, prominent in reformat circles for some years, has prepared a book called "The Education of Pictures in the Business of Inter-State Commerce" which will shortly be issued and which will urge passage of a Federal regulatory commission.

In a lengthy statement, Canon Chase reproduces part of the catechism and then ends his message with a sort of regulatory commission he would want. It would be composed of five members, to be appointed without party affiliation by the Secretary of the Treasury. The commission would operate under the supervision of the Department of the Interior.

FEDERAL DIPLOMATS

Secretary of State Hull has appointed three additional diplomatic representatives:

R. Schaar, London.

H. Herman, Berlin.

1922 Tax Figures That Amount Under 1921 Totals—All Lines of Business Show Declines

(Washington—Admission taxes collected by the Government during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, totaled $73,773,957, according to a report made public by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. This is a reduction of $16,356,892 as compared with the $80,730,832 collected from the same source during the fiscal year 1921.

Collections from the seating tax on theaters, circuses, etc., during the fiscal year, totaled $1,850,075, an increase of 100,000 over the preceding year.

A punch scene from "Rich Men's Wives," of which the New York Mail quoted: "Louis Gasnier who directed it displays the touch of his genius at many points." B. P. Schulberg produced it. Al Lichtman Corp. will distribute it. (Adj.)

Coal a Worry

Hays Cognizant of Situation Which Looks Serious—Local Theaters Without Supplies, Says Brandt

The seriousness of the coal situation, locally at least, became very evident at a meeting called yesterday by Acting Mayor Murray Hubert at which were present a large gathering of business men. William Brandt, former president of the T. O. C. C. appeared officially for that body and explained that the 700 theaters represented by his organization were without fuel.

That the situation calls for action of some sort nationally is indicated by the fact L. A. W. President Brandt is cognizant of the conditions as they exist. Courtland Smith, speaking for him, stated yesterday that Mr. Hays would make every effort to have theaters placed on a priority list. Hays returned yesterday from the Minnesota convention where, it is understood, he publicly voiced his intentions as far as coal and motion picture theaters were concerned. (Continued on Page 4)

Using the 1931 law, films would not be subjected to a censorship but would be allowed in interstate commerce after receiving a permit based on a courtroom description of the story. Permits would be revoked upon complaint from any district attorney or state sanitizer. License fees would be $10 per reel for the first print and $5 per reel for each additional print. Scientific, educational and religious films would not be taxed. After six months, the commission would revoke its license fees so as to collect enough to pay its expenses and $1,000,000 for the use of the U.S. Bureau of Education in visual instruction. Posters and advertising matter would be subject to the commission's scrutiny and everyone connected with the business compelled to register.

More of Shipman's Plans
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
St. John, N. B.—Ernest Shipman has formed two new producing companies, one in Halifax and another in New London. The Halifax company will make "The Viking" and the Newfoundland unit which will have its headquarters in St. John's will make "Fogged."
New Brunswick Films, Ltd., will produce "BLUE WATERS" by Frederick William Wallace, as their first film production. A big, stirring, colorful drama with entirely new scenic backgrounds and settings.

The story selected for Nova Scotia is "VIKING BLOOD," another well-known book by Frederick William Wallace. This story ideally fits the locality for which it is selected, and by permission of the author will be augmented in picture form by several novel punch lines and twists of the plot who is rapidly working on the picture version into shape.

After reviewing several excellent stories, Newfoundland Films, Ltd., have selected Kenneth O'Hara's "RIP TIDE" for their next film offering. The author is now at Newfoundland investigating incidents that will enhance his drama and to take advantage of his entirely new locale.

Ernest Shipman's representative at Mexico City, where a story of the Aztecs will be filmed, reports that arrangements are now being made for studio accommodations. Ernest Shipman is negotiating with Madame Petrowska to play the stellar role of the first big film drama of the Mexican unit.

Sault Ste. Marie Films, Ltd., before deciding on a director to make "THE RAPIDS," had screened for them "BACK TO GOD'S COUNTRY," "NOMADS OF THE EARTH," and "THE GOLDEN SNARE," all directed by David M. Hartford. The result was Hartford was asked to take the direction of this fascinating book.

It was during a performance of "CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED," a picture which Henry McCrae directed under great difficulties in the Canadian Rockies—that Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd., decided upon McCrae to make "THE MAN FROM GLENGARRY" and "GLENGARRY SCHOOL DAYS."

"DR. ISAACS," conceded to be F. Marion Crawford's greatest story, will be produced in India during the current year.

A production to be made at Vancouver, Brit. Col., entitled "CHIVALRY," will either refer to "THE CHIVALRY OF KEITH LEICESTER," or to an original manuscript of considerable value discovered by Ernest Shipman.

"THE LURE OF THE LABRADOR," the first great romance of the Eskimo, will at a later date be filmed by Newfoundland Films, Ltd. This production will be made in the Hudson Bay Country.

The "ULTRA" Company of Rome will produce F. Marion Crawford's "THE DIVA'S RUBY" as their second American-Italian made production.

THIRTY thousand postal cards of the cut used in this advertisement have been printed and are being mailed from Ernest Shipman's New York office to all the moving picture and legitimate theatres of the United States and Canada, also to all leading exchanges and dealers in this country and abroad. Over 5,000 will be mailed to the list of newspapers which have already commented most favorably on Ernest Shipman's productions of past years. The volume of correspondence already received in this connection has been tremendous.

Ernest Shipman has opened up temporary booking offices at Toronto, Canada, for the exploitation of some of the Canadian-made pictures over the Fall Fair circuits of the Dominion.

"The Young Diana" F. P.-L. Rivoli

S. Y. WORLD—They have dressed up Marion Davies theirselves, not blackened her eye-brows or red-headed her hair, but knock your eye out. Don't expect, however, too much of this picture. It lacks the vivacity of the laughs and it is rough than the others. It is strictly a picture to be looked at rather than read. The story is the same, but the audience is said to have disliked it.

Tribune—Just as bad as a picture of Miss Davies. She seems more insistent in that story of the life which she can act. Miss Davies turns the life of Miss Davis (in the last two years).

TRIBUNE—Do not miss "The Three-Must-Get-Their-Places." It is an extremely amusing burlesque. In its most hilarious moments, the audience roars with laughter. The story is that of two men who try to outwit each other and in the end are successful, but not to their own advantage.

Herald—"A travesty on the screen version of Alexandre Dumas' "The Three Musketeers" which would probably parallel even the energizing Douglas Fairbanks with laughter. Although it lacks the genius of the original, the humor is still excellent.

Morning Telegraph—"A winner. Most of the characters, including Mr. Fairbanks, Mr. Low, and Professor Capelani, are extremely likable and will appeal to those who enjoy the burlesque. The humor is the best I have seen in a picture since the 'ladies' of the previous year's picture. Great fun."

Post—"It is an entertaining mixture of clever fun-making, craziness, and the usual Miss Linder.

Globe—The audience seemed to enjoy the picture, probably because we ourselves, though, considering the possibilities, we were not too sure of the fun and perhaps a better comedy should have been possible."

Mail—"The film proves nothing but what we know about burlesque. It achieves the效果 of the stage, but it is not funny."

SUN—"It is ludicrous enough to make one laugh more than one laugh."

Journal—"One of the most interesting things about this picture is the way Miss Davis has been called a "lady," a "lady," and a "lady.""

Eve—"At any rate the scenario is not to be preferred in its unpretentious simplicity: as soon as Miss Davis is cast as the heroine, the story becomes more interesting.

SUN—"Joseph Urban has made the film a thing of beauty with its settings. Each new picture he has had in his hand seems to improve pictorially. He has now mastered the effects of the nature of the picture and the camera catches velvety and shady with much success."

Evening Journal—"It is interesting to see how Miss Davis and Mr. Fairbanks have triumphed in the difficult art of burlesque. Their performances are well done and the picture is entertaining.

Tribune—"The picture is not to be missed by the lovers of Miss Davis or Mr. Fairbanks. It is full of the usual funny situations and situations of the absurd."

The Valley of Silent Men F. P. L.

Rialto

N. Y. WORLD—Seems to us to be about as effectively done as is possible with any of these melodramatic things. There is not much question that the average spectator has a pretty good notion as to how matters will work out in the end all along the line, but with Alma Rubens in the principal part and Lew Cody, Joseph King and George Nash in other important roles, it succeeds in maintaining its audience at times. Certainly it grips the interest and keeps one on the floor.

Herald— Gets on stronger with the help of some powerful scenes. Once more nature in all its wildness comes to the aid of what might otherwise be a disappointed photographer, and avalanches turn a tite story into a landslide. It is a James Oliver Curwood running true to form.

 MORNING TELEGRAPH—Although the standard ingredients—even to the thunderstorm—have been utilized from a pictorial standpoint, the picture is a real triumph.

AMERICAN—Against the limitless background of the northern wilderness an engrossing tale of love and mystery and violence was thrown on the screen.  It was the realism—no, it was the reality of the setting that caused the first thrill.  Not since "River's End" has there been a true Northwest picture shown in this town.

GLOBE— Much of the wide appeal there seems to be in these northwest dramas lies in the scenic beauty with which it is possible to endow them. Rarely, if ever, has one of them been so generously treated in this respect.  From a dramatic standpoint, too, the story by James Oliver Curwood is splendidly done.

SUN— Brought the atmosphere of the North to the Rialto.

EVE WORLD— It's a Northwest Mounted yarn and if you like that sort of thing you will, we imagine, find some interest in the unraveling of the much-twisted plot.

EVE JOURNAL— A picture that gets from the start !  There are scenes that can only be called photographic masterpieces.  The girl of the picture is Alma Rubens and she does dominate the company.

EVE TELEGRAPH—With more than a hint of the passing of summer in the atmosphere the new picture  seems especially appropriate,  and it brings with amazing reality the atmosphere of the Frozen North.

Dusk to Dawn—Associated Exhibitors Capitol

N. Y. WORLD—Miss Alma Rubens in her favorite field of dreams and souls.  It is pretty thin going, say we.

HERALD— Beautiful views of far stretching landscape, interesting reproduction of life in India, and uncommonly good conventional photographic values marked the film.  The story, which was generally dramatic in stretches, grew somewhat con fused only at the end.*

POST— Both parts cleverly played by Florence Vidor. Here is another young woman who understands the art of action before the camera's merciless eye.  The composition and photography of the scenes supposedly laid in India are especially notable.

EVE WORLD— Proves a very tiresome night.

EVE JOURNAL— Requires imagination, both in author and in the audience.  The picture is very well done, with Florence Vidor playing both roles in a very pleasing manner.

EVE TELEGRAPH— A thrilling drama.  The solution  is unusual.

Putting It Over

Tulsa, Okla.—The only con that has been voiced against Clear Call has been a sub- normal that the title does not itself as easily to exploitation up as might be wished for, manager of the Rialto, is on hand to disprove the statement for he se a double trick purely on the possibilities of the title.

The two pages that feature Sunday edition of the Tribune based on One Clear Call in face capitals for the leading lines of the masked rider nently displayed in each one. A store advertised "One Clear Call Have Your Prescriptions Filled restaurant advertised "One Clear to a Good Meal." An auto dealer used "One Clear Call! New Organization

An announcement that has just been made by the Paramount Pictures Corp. has been received with interest by the independent distributors of the country. The stockholders of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. have voted to dissolve their company and form a new one to be known as the Famous Players Organization, Inc.

The new company will control all operations of the former Famous Players-Lasky Corp. The new stockholders have been announced as D. W. G. Hearst, trustees of the Bleeker Foundation, and representatives of other persons interested in the industry.

Out of Missouri Co.

Fred L. Whelan, president of the Missouri Independent Theatres, has announced that he is leaving the industry and that he will not run a Missouri independent circuit in the future.

Promotions at Famous Players

Three Paramount exploiters have been advanced to executive positions at Famous Players-Lasky. John D. Howard, assistant to Harold Franklin, has been promoted to the rank of director of the theatre department. LeRoy Bragman, assistant to C. M. Saunders, has been promoted to the rank of director of exploitation. Norman Dixon has been made manager of the New York office.

Hearst Takes Over Criterion

William Randolph Hearst has leased the Criterion Theater, a major New York house, and will operate it himself. The Criterion has been a major theatre in New York for many years and is considered one of the most important in the city.

“Around the World” Film

The film “Around the World” has been released by Famous Players-Lasky and is now playing in theatres throughout the country. The film tells the story of a man who travels around the world and encounters many adventures.

Whelan Sees Prosperity Ahead

Fred L. Whelan, president of the Missouri Independent Theatres, believes that the theatre industry will experience a period of prosperity. He predicts that the next few years will be good for the industry and that there will be a return to normal business conditions.

Brown’s Contract Expires

Clarence Brown’s contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. has expired. His last picture was “The Light in the Dark.”

The orchestra starts with a rendition of Dvorak’s “New World Symphony” and during the “Largo” films photographed by W. A. Van Scoy, called “Ardacian Meadows,” are flashed upon the screen. After that the ballet corps, including Nile, Gamakrelli, Alcosteni, Omansky, Doris Niles, Tasha Zanou, and others, offers a terpsichorean display from Borodin’s “Prince Igor.” The Capitol News comes next, with a “Dance Hindu” by Doris Niles following. Florence Vidor in “Dusk to Dawn,” the feature, follows this dance. Luja de Buda, ballerina from Budapest, makes her American debut in Strassan’s “Morgen-Journal,” and Johnny Jones in “Makin’ Movies” closes.

Rialto

Another James Oliver Curwood story of the Northwest comes to Broadway in “The Valley of Silent Men,” with Alma Rubens in the feature. Other film numbers include “Flyer,” a Max Fleischer Out of the Inkwell cartoon, and the usual magazine. The orchestra offers Franz von Suppé’s “Morning, Noon and Night in Vienna,” as the overture, followed by “Rienzi’s Classical Jazz,” Grace Bowman, a soprano, who sings “My Heart Is Calling,” by Leo Fall, and Arthur J. Martell at the Wurlitzer are also on the program.

Rivoli

Julie Marronet’s “Piedre” is played by the orchestra at the opening, and then the pictorial is presented. Lillian Howell and Martha Mansen dance what is called “Spring, a Fantasy,” with settings by Joseph Urban. Marion Davies in “The Young Diana” is the feature. Following that number is a duet, “Surely and You,” by Arthur Penn and arranged by Joseph Xuro, Mirlax Las, and Suzon Lida Ovayo, mezzo soprano, sing this, “The Pawnshop,” an old Chaplin, is revived at the close.

Strand

Two films of feature length are on the program. R. A. Walsh production, “Kings of the Dust,” and Max Linder in “The Three Must-Get-There’s,” a travesty on “The Three Musketeers.” The orchestra plays Nicolai’s “Merry Wives of Windsor” as the overture and there is another musical offering sung by Harold Brown and Kitty McLaughlin, namely, a duet from Rossini’s “Chevalier Rustique.” Of course, the topical review is included on the bill.

For Other Houses:

“The Prisoner of Zenda,” “Forget Me Not,” John Barrymore in “Sherlock Holmes,” Home Pictures in “Human Hearts,” “Monte Cristo” and “Nero” continue at the Astor, Criterion, Cameo, Central, 44th St. and Lyric, respectively.

“Lady Hamilton”

Reported American Concern Plans to Release Big Oswald Production Made Abroad

Considerable mystery shrouds the probable release of "Lady Hamilton" by foreign production made by Richard Oswald, and which was sold this country for $175,000.

At the time of the sale there was much interest as to the purchaser. Parish, who was then unknown in picture circles. Later Rudolph was representing the producer, arrived here, and talked with one of the best distributing organizations regarding the picture which created such a stir abroad, upon which Carabelli did not however accept the terms offered. Reports have been in circulation recently that Sterling Pictures, later formed in New Jersey, will have charge of the American rights, and that distribution plans have been determined upon. It is said that the picture will be released such as "The Four Horsemen" was that is in one large city after another, without a general release date, as is usually the case. Special exhibition will be given each presentation. It is said that Parish is interested in the new company, and that over $50,000 will be spent for initial exhibition. The name of a well known man is being mentioned in connection with the distribution, but it is impossible to locate him yesterday to verify the report.

New Feature at Criterion

"Forget Me Not" closes at the Criterion on Saturday. On Sept. 10 "When Knighthood Was in Flower" will have its premiere. In the interval, Owen Moore in "Love Is An Awful Thing" will be seen there.

Goldwyn Exchange in Milwaukee

Valentino Claims Breach of Contract; Objects to Form of F.P.-L. Advertising

Not Going West to Start Next Production—Famous Will Fight Through Courts to Establish Validity of Contract for "Protection of Producers"—Sensational Career of Leading Box Office Attraction

Rudolph Valentino has served notice on Famous Players that he will not continue with that company because, he claims, the company has breached its contract so far as publicity and advertising were concerned.

Arthur Butler Graham is Valentino's attorney. When he was asked yesterday whether he cared to comment on the report regarding the star, he said he had nothing to say in confirmation or denial. Questioned as to whether or not another organization had made offers for Valentino's services, he replied he could make no statement at this time.

Ekle John Ludvig, counsel of Famous Players, when queried regarding this development admitted that the matter had been brought to his attention. The report reaching THE FILM DAILY credited Valentino with serving notice on Famous Players that he would not return to the studio to make further productions.

Mr. Ludvig stated yesterday that the matter of advertising and publicity had come up shortly after "Blood and Sand" was pre-released, and when the picture had not been generally shown to the public. He added that when Valentino left the coast, he promised to return to the studio by Sept. 4 to start work on his next picture which was to be "A Spanish Cavalier."

Ludvig said: "For once Famous Players intends establishing in court whether a contract means anything, not so much for the sake of Famous Players as for the business as a whole. We intend ascertaining whether a contract will hold, and we intend to use every legal remedy to require him (Valentino) to perform his agreement."

At the Hays' office it was explained that the contractual relations between any star and any member of that association was of no concern to Mr. Hays and his staff and that no action of any sort was contemplated in connection with Valentino or any other similar case.

Of "Rich Men's Wives," presented by B. P. Schulberg at the Capitol, New York, through the Al Lichtman Corporation, the N. Y. Sun said—"An excellent picture. Those who love the sensation of laughing and crying simultaneously will find that little Richard Headrick gives them the opportunity."—Adv.

Anna Nilsson Injured

Charles R. Condon, director of publicity for Larry B. Mayer yesterday wired from the coast that Anna Q. Nilsson who is appearing in "Hearts Aflame," Reginald Barker's first picture for Mayer was severely burned about the face, neck and shoulders while on location near San Fernando of Sunday night.

A six-acre plot of ground was soaked with 700 gallons of gasoline and set afire for a scene in which Miss Nilsson was severely burned in the face, neck and shoulders, as she stood near the locomotive. Percy Hilburn, cameraman shot the scene from an asbestos box at the back of the locomotive and one man was injured.

The Courts

Leonce Perret, who has been doing business as the Emerald Film Co., is being sued in the Supreme Court for $2,150 by Miss Georgette Duchesne. Perret, is in Europe where he will be served by publication. An attachment has also been issued against property he might have here.

Miss Duchesne alleges that on January 31, 1921, Perret, agreed to pay her one-sixth of the profits of the Emerald Film Co. and that there is now due from her that source, $927. Prior to January 21, says the plaintiff, there was due her $100, for money loaned to Perret. Miss Duchesne also claims that from February 1917 to May 1921, she acted as secretary for Perret, and that there is owing to her as salary, $1,029.

Two judgments have been filed against the Paladin Pictures Corp. One is a City Court judgment for $1,419 obtained by the Republic Laboratories, Inc., for work done and materials furnished in connection with printing done for the defendant. The other judgment is for $288 and was obtained in the Sixth District, Municipal Court, by the Ullman Manufacturing Co. The transcript of the latter judgment filed in the County Clerk's office does not state what the claim was for.

"Around the World" a Serial

"Around the World in 18 Days" concerning which a report appeared in yesterday's issue will be made as a serial by Universal.

NEGATIVE and POSITIVE

The producer knows that if he fails to get a good NEGATIVE, his picture will be a failure. Therefore, he employs a capable director and competent cameramen, and supposes them with the best equipment he can obtain.

Some producers spend lavishly to get a good negative, but try to economize with cheap prints. Heretofore, this has been a mistaken policy, for cheap prints were poor ones.

A good POSITIVE is as essential to the success of a production as a good negative. Even more so, it might be said—for the positive print is what the public pays to see.

Now, the producer can economize when he orders prints, and still get good ones. The wonderful Tube System recently installed in our laboratories enable us to furnish perfect positives at rates no higher than others charge for poor ones.

To the Exhibitors

Who Will Share in the Greatest Week in History—

Congratulations!

NEXT week will be the greatest week in history.

It is Fifth Annual Paramount Week. Each year there has been a steady increase in the number of exhibitors booking this week, and this year the increase has been large out of all proportion.

The newspaper and magazine advertising has been greater than ever. This year over 2,000 newspapers in the United States will carry the Paramount Week message.

The Paramount product is greater than ever. The "Famous 41" excel any group ever offered. Everybody knows that now. A colossal advertising campaign has announced this complete group to the public.

This combination of product, public interest, exhibitor enthusiasm and advertising will make next week a turning point in the motion picture industry.

Fifth Annual Paramount Week will open a season that will be the greatest in history for everybody. The depression, that everyone has felt since the war, will be over. The motion picture business will be back on its feet again.

All this would be impossible were it not for the organization behind Paramount Pictures—an organization that has the courage and the resources to invest in the most expensive product and the most expensive advertising in history.

Everybody will profit by Paramount Week. But most of all the thousands of exhibitors who are taking direct advantage of it.

So—congratulations!

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Tried Several Schemes

Niagara Falls, Ont.—When the World's Fair closed, "Pharaoh," several plans to attract the multitude were put into operation. To begin with, an arrangement was made with one of the leading hotels to stage a musical dance in its ball room, called, "An Arabian Night." Patricia O'Connor, well-known musical comedy prima donna sang at the affair and then appeared at the theater in a musical prologue. The hotel, for a week prior to the opening of the production inserted ads in local and Buffalo newspapers, issuing 2,000 invitation cards, and adjacently placed in the most conspicuous position in the hotel lobby a large frame consisting of photographs of Miss O'Connor and wording that advertised the dance as well as the fact that she would also appear in the prologue at the Webb. The invitation cards and the ads carried identical announcements. A large notice similarly worded was also posted on the announcement board beside the reception desk. The hotel used their selected mailing list to send out a number of the invitations, arranged for a card to be delivered to the room of every guest, and placed others on the tables of the lounge, palm room, writing and reading rooms. The theater also mailed out a large number, placed them on the menus of all the leading restaurants, and by arrangements with several bookstores placed others in the copies of latest issues of the best selling magazines.

Leading stores in Niagara Falls carried plugging of Miss O'Connor and stills from the film in their windows. A special canvass of all men's and women's clubs in both Niagara Falls, Ont., and N. Y., was made. Cut-outs decorated the front of the theater, in addition to frames with photographs of Miss O'Connor and lobby cards of the picture. During the day these cut-outs were affixed to the back and sides of a large touring car which was driven throughout the town and its New York namesake. The affair at the hotel further heralded a specialamaudiaeurees special news wire feature, "In the Name of the Law." It was staged by Harold Wendt, F. B. O. field expert. The campaign started when the pictures were released for Chicago. The Police Graul who wrote a letter of endorsement which was reproduced on 500 window cards used in the downtown district. Permission was also obtained from the police to place three large sheet cut-outs in the downtown district, under the charge of three men who carried them from one busy corner to another during the entire day. The stunt used during the New York run by Nat Rothstein of having a camera take pictures of the crowds from an automobile was also used in Cleveland to advantage. A few feet of film was taken at intervals and a crowd was never absent from around the cameraman, who had plastered his stand with announcements of "In the Name of the Law." A tie-up, made possible by the title of the picture, was arranged with the Steward-Warner Speedometer Co., which carried a circular speedometer on their trucks, on the bottom of which was printed "Drive-carefully to see etc.

Horse Race Was a Surprise

Stopping traffic on Broadway between 45th and 43rd Sts., during a Saturday noon hour and drawing the eyes of the crowds to the house where "My Dad" was showing was the result obtained by the F. B. O. during the run of that picture at the George M. Cohan. Broadway saw a horse race between high class race horses mounted by actual jockeys, the scene, as far as the audience concerned, resembling in every way a gala day at one of the big racing centers. The steeds, each carrying its respective jockey, were started at the barrier and raced at full speed between crowds that lined the sidewalk and part of the street from 45th street to the entrance of the house where they crossed the tape almost neck and neck. Of course each horse carried a banner in plain sight advertising the Johnny Walker production.

Programs for the Blind

The programs in raised lettering were used by the audience of blind persons at the special showing of "Forget-Me-Not" at Loew's New York recently, proved one of the most interesting exploitation features in connection with this event. As a response to the interest which has been displayed in these programs, the Motion Picture officials have had a sufficient number of them printed to enable the various exchanges throughout the country to distribute them to exhibitors who may desire to carry out the same exploitation stunt. Two types were used in the presentation of the programs; the Revised Braille and the New York Point. In addition to the names of the cast there appeared remarks about those who played the leading roles.

On the Marquee

Winston-Salem, N. C.—The Auditorium got over the Ku Klux Klan effect of "One Clear Call" without the use of the night riders. He simply took the six sheets and made a huge cut out of the klanman that measured at least seven feet and put it on the top of the marquee. Simple, broad in construction and a sure eye catcher it offered a good example of how marquee space can be used for exploitation when it becomes impossible or inadvisable to use the street ballyhoos.

An Egyptian Lobby

Jacksonville, Fla.—Manager Guy Kenimer of the Arcade sold "The Loves of Pharaoh" with a fine lobby. The front was dressed to represent a big archway with Egyptian figures covering the front. Under it, looking into the theater, was a large reproduction of the treasure house which plays an important part in the picture. In addition Kenimer worked a newspaper essay contest which forced the participants to see the picture first. "What Were The Loves of Pharaoh" was the topic.

Billie Dove in Williams' Show

Los Angeles—Billie Dove was credited in "All the Brothers Were Valiant" a Ben Ames Williams' production, which Irvin Willat directed for Metro. Miss Dove's first picture has been renamed "Youth to Youth," its original title was "Country Love." Production of "June Madam" has finished. Viola Dana has let Yosemite.

15 Melodramatic Episodes!
Curwood, past master of Northwest country fiction, never wrote a better story than "The Valley of Silent Men."

Borzage, who directed "Humoresque," took his company to the actual location where the scenes are laid and there, amidst the natural surroundings, made his picture. He has created another "Humoresque," the gold medal winner, the picture exhibitors fought for and of which the public never tired.

Alma Rubens does the greatest work of her career. Lew Cody, George Nash and Joe King are included in the all-star cast.

Tilt With F. P.-L.
(Continued from Page 1) who have followed the meteoric career of Valentino say they are not surprised in the slightest. Mention of many exhibitors Valentino is one of, if not the most popular box office act at the moment of any male performer on the screen today. With the wide interest in the season from a box office viewpoint, just what this will gross is questionabIe: Just how exhibitors and exchanges can it mount over two million, based on present values. One exhibitor of prominence said only a few days ago that present high prices of exceptional pictures is based chiefly on the manner in which the-public has flocked to the box office to see "Blood and Sand." Valentino has been in pictures some time. In a small way he supported a number of stars in the past, but it was not until Rex Ingram started on the "Hurrellmen" and studio gossip leaked out that Valentino was a "find" that any in the industry and the public would pay $3,000 a week during the last year of the contract. For the first year the salary is reported around $1,000 a week. For Paramount, Valentino first appeared in "The Sheik," which was a tremendous box office attraction. There was some question whether this was due to the story or Valentino, or both. Then he worked with Gloria Swanson in "Beyond the Rocks" and again the crowds flocked to the box office. But they came to see Valentino—the women especially. The following release of Gloria Swanson proved this. Then Lasky gave him the lead in "Blood and Sand" and the industry knows what has happened. It ran at the Rivoli and broke all records for two weeks and then played jointly at the Rialto and Rivoli. It is just beginning to be released all over the country and so far has proven a knockout.

Valentino's next, "The Young Rajah," is completed, but he was expected to start on "A Spanish Cavalier" next week in Hollywood.

Annet "Robin Hood"

Clowns Were HIred

Melvin VanDerlip's newest short animated picture, "Frogs, Rocks," had two clever clowns sold "Love's Boomerang" for Manager H. B. Clarke of the Majestic. The clowns were hired at a small expense and did their stunts out on the side-walk, always attracting a crowd. Toy animals borrowed from a department store occupied a table in front of box-office and were arranged to resemble a miniature circus ring. A large card was tacked on the table with ad copy for the picture. Two large banners converged under the marquee and sold the picture and Ann Forrest and David Powell, the two new girls, to the pedestrians. Under these were cut-out boomerangs of various sizes. The exploitation cost Clarke $21 and he says receipts on this picture were much increased.

A Walking Bally-Hoo

Roanoke, Va.—Elmer D. Heins believes in word-of-mouth advertising and with the cooperation of Harry Schmitz, Paramount manager here, he got it for "If You Believe It, It's So." They located a nice, neatly-dressed man, in his sixties, with a mustache—in fact a respectable and attractive person. He has lived in Roanoke all his life and knows nearly everybody on the streets. He sauntered up to the first acquaintance and said: "If You Believe It, It's So." "What on earth are you talking about?" was the query. "I'm talking about a picture, 'If You Believe It, It's So.' It's playing at the Rialto and is just about the best you ever saw." The old man kept it up all day, and after he got a good line perfected he grew bolder and passed it on. He figured that he must have spoken to several hundred people. Which is a fine nucleus for a lot of talk.

Toy Frogs Make Them Hop In

Sandusky, 0..—George Schade pulled a real novelty for his showing of "The Seventh Day" starring Dick Barthelmess at the house bearing his name. He put out a toy-frog that measured two and a half inches and was one inch wide and reflected an emerald. The real reason for the frog's notoriety however, lay in the unusual twist. Under his head was a thick wad of wax, not so big as to reach the table, but simply inserted snugly in the cavity under the flexible cardboard, mechanical catch, with a point could be inserted so as to catch on this wax and then release, causing the frog to make a jump anywhere from one foot to three yards. The figures are based upon actual tests, the nine feet being the furthest they could travel in five Ahead. The sign on the frog's back had appropriate information, reading, "Top to the Schade Theater—The Seventh Day." These are being distributed of children worked very effectively, for it leaped all over the Sandusky picnic grounds and caused laughter.

Look! Like a Cave

At Tivoli, Las Vegas, first Talmadge filmed in "The Primitive Lover" had a cave man title, according to the ideas of Arthur E. Weld, manager of the Stead, and he built a lobby to match. Rocks, rocks, nothing but rocks, (built of cardboard, of course) greeted the eyes of the people as they neared the Strand. The heat outside was forgotten as they gazed into the cooling depths of Weld's latest creation, and this fact, coupled with the appropriateness of lobby for title, drew a good business during the engagement. The manager had two plans more than ready to deplore scenes in the Rocky Mountains and these were to conceal the actual photo frames on the walls and to lend depth to the illustration. The box office was situated back of a riff in the rocks occasioned by a landslide during the previous winter. Moving set pieces gave realism to the interior lobby. From the sidewalk line to the entrance every piece of brickwork was covered by colossal rocks and the effect was like entering a cave. Appropriately lighting effects were used, and until the patron entered the auditorium.

Using the Lobby

Spartanburg, S. C.—The lobby of the Rex is long and narrow, which fact was used by Manager A. C. Cowles in exploiting "The Dictator." A week in advance, Cowles covered both sides of his lobby with signs painted in auster colors, which gave off the name of the star and title of the film in enormous letters. This was the first time the walls had been used for such purposes and it attracted attention. The night before the opening, Cowles and his assistants made a thatched straw hut out of the lobby office and put a red and orange billboard of the lobby itself. Tall bamboo was cut from the bamboo and lined both sides of the lobby meeting at the top roof where a small sign on the roof. Small potted palms were arranged along both sides, and a large artificial palm stood on each side at the front. The box office was completely masked with cover and wheat. No extra newspaper advertising was taken and the efficiency of this trick was such that the billing was used. Business jumped forty per cent over its summer average during the two-day run. The lobby cost $25.00 and Cowles says it paid for itself many times.

No More Scenarios from Kelly

Anthony Paul Kelly will write film scripts no more, the decision being made due to what he calls "butchering" of story. According to the playwright, the directors have the last word and say with regard to the making of the picture. He goes on to remark: "I wouldn't have minded if stories were intelligently handled, through which the changes might be of benefit, but they are not, at least as far as I have observed in person.''

Says Prints Are Bad

Bought some and buying more. What will the theaters do to get the money? Answer — "Can buy theaters without money — they give them away!" If we have no money we would not go into the picture business. Have not made a cent for 18 months and know of two exhibitors who have. In my eighteen years in this business I have seen it 'four times' the picture business is out — but it come back," said Dennis O'Guanaire.

"A lot of detail in bad shape. For example, bad prints. What is it? Is the stock bad, or the distributors unable to buy enough prints or perhaps projection machines in such bad shape that prints are 'runned in running'? The public are sick of seeing dirty films. They have no surplus to put in good restaurant and finding a 'fly in the pie.' You go out and never come back as there is no argument on the subject.

"Last week we put in a big picture in one of my 'pet' theaters. Without noticing it I came in and everything was 'sitting great' - Fine front and lobby display. — A smile on the cashier's face, no customers at attention. — Fans and air fine. Music marvelous. Light on screen perfect. — Theater clean, everything 100%. I was proud of my theater. The picture started, Titles and subtitles so short they could not be read, — rainy, jumpy, — scenes cut out, — the print was 1,000 feet short. Consider. I had done everything in exploitation and presentation possible, and promised my patrons so much and my film prints made a liar out of me. Any exhibitor who has pride in his work would commit murder under the circumstances. I, alone, paid enough for the picture to buy several prints. If you went to a library and gave you a book with the front pages torn out and the rest of the pages smeared — would you care for the book? The same with a picture. Our film libraries should keep a good print if we expect the public to consider the picture.

These things have a great bearing on general business conditions and force many exhibitors out of business, — especially the small ones. Poor prints and Poor prints — that's much of the trouble. Perhaps poor machines do damage. True, many exhibitors are broke and don't know it. I cannot believe no surplus to keep up equipment. There is more to running a theater than buying pictures. Most anyone can operate a theater, but no everyone can make them give milk.

"All these hardships thrown on the exhibitor will react. Co-operation is lacking, and much buying and selling of pictures remains in the same ethics the cave man used. Well, let's get on with the day — it's a good one.' When Arthur Butler Graham was asked to comment on this newest development, he said he had the matter under advisement and that in all likelihood he would, in turn, send a letter to Mr. Hays.

Report a New Projector

According to yesterday's Morning World, Barnett W. Harris of Chicago has invented a new projector which puts "life in moving pictures." The projector was described as follows:

"The new effect is accomplished with standard motion picture machinery, minor changes being incorporated in the new projector."

"The picture is taken with two cameras, set in positions corresponding to the right and left eye. In the development the two films are double-printed on one film. In its projection this film is run through a machine with a double aperture, which throws two images on the screen, one above the other, the upper one being the reproduction of the film taken by the camera representing the right eye and the lower that representing the left."

The instruments have for eye-pieces prisms arranged so as to reflect the light rays from the upper picture to the right eye and the rays from the lower picture to the left. The two combine on the principle of the old stereoscope to show one picture, giving the sense of depth."

Sterling Pictures' Personnel
It is understood that Sterling Pictures, which handles "Lady Hamilton," the big foreign picture based on the career of Lord Nelson, includes in its personnel P. S. Parish and Thomas F. Martin. Parish is a capitalast who, it is said, engineered several large loans to foreign governments, and during the war was interested in the munitions. Thomas F. Martin, secretary of State of New Jersey, is heavily interested in reality in both Jazz and New York, and is also proprietor of the Hudson Despatch of Jersey City.
Neither of these men will appear actively in the operations of the Sterling. The work will be left to a well known film man whose identification with the company is expected to be made shortly.
As previously noted "Lady Hamilton" was made by Richard Oswald, and the title role is played by Liliane Haide, reported to be a sensational beauty of Europe.

Eastman House Ready
The architectural design of the main auditorium is Italian Renaissance. Venetian in treatment. The walls at certain points have hangings of rich velvet and tapestries which add warmth and color. The seats are opera chairs, upholstered in the back with mohair velvet, with leather bottoms. The three levels are covered throughout, back to the last row of seats on each, with heavy Saxony carpet. The foilies and all levels are enriched with sals, chairs, tables and lamps of various suitable periods.
The stage, 42 feet deep and 91 feet wide, is built and equipped to stage any type of theatrical production.
The stage setting for pictures depicts an Italian garden with terraces, walls and balustrades leading to a great marquise or tent of brilliantly colored silk. The curtains of this open and disclose a picture screen, 20 by 24 feet. The orchestra pit is 14 ft. deep and extends across the entire front of the stage, which is more than a story opening into the basement. It provides room sufficient for an orchestra of 60 pieces.
The feature, which will be shown three times daily, is On Wednesdays, the house will be closed until the evening concert. On Thursdays, a new feature will be introduced and continued until Sunday. In October, it is planned to inaugurate the work of grand opera.
Adolph Zukor, J. D. Williams and a number of other important film men have already visited the Eastman theater. Because the Labor Day holiday is at hand, the number who would ordinarily attend the premiere will be somewhat curtailed. Many of the members of The Allied Laboratories Ass'n will be in Rochester.

INTERIORS ..................... Satisfactory; titles good DETAIL ..................... Excellent; title good CHARACTER OF STORY....... Suits any house; charming love story
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 7,737 feet

“East is West” looks like a smashing hit for Connie Talmadge. That should be enough. For after all there isn’t a lot more to be said. She does easily the best work of her career in this big production. While there may be some difference of opinion coming from those who saw the stage play, as to the liberties taken in the characterization of Ming Toy, as presented by Connie, broadly speaking, considering the hundreds of thousands who did not see the stage play and who may see in pictures, the production will easily be sure fire from a box office viewpoint.

But even as in the stage play when George Nash almost stole the show as Charley Yong, so Warner Oland handles the screen characterization. His miucing walk, his gestures, his complete difference as the dandified Chinese and the Oriental with a background of villainy make him stand out strongly. His is the best work in the entire picture.

Too much praise cannot be given the production. The early shots showing a street in China lack atmosphere but when they pass on to the home of Hop Toy the atmosphere is laid on thick. The love boat is also excellently done, although a stronger close up could have been advantageously used. The shot is too long. The lightings are fine, although once or twice the star has too much light and it was a mistake to show Connie holding the little Chinese tots to her cheek kissing them good bye. The difference is too easily determined.

Frances Marion, always dependable, presented a scenario evidently intended to fit Connie. And it does. As the devilish girl on the love boat where she screws her face into knots to prevent being sold to a rich Mandarin; and later, when in “Frisco, she chews gum as American girls do, and dances, and makes good gos eyes, she is delightful.

Towards the close they ring in melodrama when Charley Yong starts to kidnap Ming Toy, and this presents quite a little thrill. The end of course, finds Ming Toy to be a stolen American child, and not a Chinese, and the finish shows her with Billy Benson, and you can imagine the rest. The story is too well known to need retelling, and if you don’t know it, the First National salesman will gladly tell it to you.

Brush Up the “S.R.O.” Sign—You’ll Need It For This One
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This looks like a sure fire hit. You had better get this one, not only because it is a big picture, but because the atmosphere, the story, and the whole thing is so different from the usual big picture that it is bound to make a stir.

There are some exhibitors who think the Connie Talmadge pictures have been too high for them to cash in on, but this one looks like ready money. So you had better think it over seriously. You have so many angles to work on that you need hardly any help in this connection. But make sure to tell about the great success of the stage play, which ran for months on Broadway. Use the star’s name, and don’t overlook Warner Oland who has quite a reputation as a serial villain. If you go in for lobby decoration or prologues, there is a splendid opportunity to do big things with this one.

dramatic touch

DIRECTION .......... Even; at times very strong

PHOTOGRAPHY ........ Beautiful. Snow stuff magnificent

LIGHTINGS...... At times too pronounced in interior shots

EXTERIORS ............... Superb and inspiring

INTERIORS .. Satisfy

DETAIL ........ Finish might have been improved

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Should please generally.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 6,541 feet

Typically a Curwood out-doors drama; full of mystery from the beginning almost to the very end Cosmopolitan's "Valley of Silent Men" brings a mighty good picture to you. There is an air of profound mystery as to the cause of two killings, and finally another one, from the start, and it is going to be hard to outguess this, even by the fans who study pictures for this purpose alone. You have no idea how many of such there are, either.

Of course you have the great out-door stuff which Curwood always uses, and Director Borzage has found some great locations including a magnificent snow clad glacier. Chester Lyons has used a telephoto lens with mighty good result, and some of the shots drew applause from the Rialto audience for their sheer beauty alone.

Incidentally Borzage gives a real thrill in one of these shots where you see Alma Rubens hanging on the ledge of the great mountain, with the rocks below, and with barely a foothold. This series of shots might have been held longer, or the reunion of the lovers in the cabin introduced in a better way, and found a much more satisfying touch. As it was, after hero Lew Cody and Alma struggle through the snow and seem to be lost to each other they find this isolated cabin without difficulty. It looks too much like "movie stuff." From there on the finish is almost abrupt. Another slip, one of the few in the production, also comes at this point, where the brother officer of Cody, a member of the Northwest Mounted, who has declared that he will "bring in" Cody, seems satisfied by the explanation of the dying man and allows Lew and Alma to go unhampered on their way to the Valley of Silent Men. A title could easily clear this up.

Barring these points, however, the production is well handled. Borzage starts the picture with real suspense, almost from the opening shot and holds it all the way through and it never gets away. This is one of the best pictures recently shown which holds the atmosphere of suspense so well. Cody as the member of the Northwest Mounted, believing he is dying from a gunshot wound, confesses to a murder which he did not commit. For this murder there is arrested a man who once saved Cody's life, and Cody figures as he will die anyway that he can take the murder on his shoulders. But instead of dying Cody recovers and is held for the murder he did not commit. How a mysterious girl, Marette, of the Valley of Silent Men, and her father, figure in all the important developments; how the mystery is developed and finally unwound satisfactorily make for a very interesting picture.

Alma Rubens is featured as Marette, and is quite satisfying. At times she is very beautiful. But Lew Cody as usual does very good work.

You Have a Lot of Good Names to Play With in This One
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have a lot to talk about in this. You have James Oliver Curwood's name, and that should mean a lot to your patrons in view of his many screen successes. They will know it is a picture of the big out-doors and when, in addition to this you inform them of the nature of the mystery, and tell how Borzage has maintained this note to the end you have something more than the usual. In addition the title is a good one and in the event that you go in for catchlines will work out nicely in various ways. The type of production easily fits for lobby displays and prologues. Some attractive ideas can be developed in this connection.

Borzage should be well known to your people, but you can remind them that he made "Humoresque" and that will help. Alma Rubens' name may be remembered by your people, and she certainly appears beautiful in this. You know what to do with Curwood. The Hearst publications will probably give this a lot of publicity and this should also help you cash in.
Magnificent Colored Photography Feature of Hope Hampton’s Latest

Hope Hampton in ‘THE LIGHT IN THE DARK’
Hope Hampton Prod.—Asso. First Nat’l Pict. Inc.
DIRECTOR..........................Clarence Brown
AUTHOR............................William Dudley Pelley
SCENARIO BY......................Clarence Brown and Wm. D. Pelley
ART DIRECTOR....................Ben Carre
CAMERAMAN......................Alfred Orteib
AS A WHOLE......Easily the best picture Hope Hampton has made; color work magnificent STORY......New twist in love story by virtue of The Holy Grail being worked in; trite at beginning but interesting
DIRECTION.................Generally satisfactory
PHOTOGRAPHY.............Good—color process probably best ever shown in this country
LIGHTINGS..............Too much on star at times
STAR.......Works easier than ever. At times very good SUPPORT......Lon Chaney scores honors; E. K. Lincoln satisfies in churlish role; others have little to do
EXTERIORS...................Few but good
INTERIORS......................Satisfy
DETAIL...........Well handled; some good touches
CHARACTER OF STORY......Will suit any house
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,600 feet

“The Light in the Dark,” otherwise Faith, is by odds, the best story, and certainly is better handled by Hope Hampton than anything she has ever done. There appear several opportunities for Miss Hampton to show that she has developed materially since her last picture, and while the story is somewhat trite (the usual poor girl falling in love with a millionaire) still there is a brand new twist—the introduction of The Holy Grail, or what is supposed to be The Holy Grail—and this works to a very interesting finish.

Incidentally the introduction of this feature allows the use of about a reel of colored photography, showing Tennyson’s famous interpretation of The Holy Grail, and this is, by odds, the finest color work ever shown in this country. It undeniably lifts the value of the production materially. If the picture contained nothing else of value—and in fact it does—the reel mentioned would easily make it attractive to lots of people. Too much praise cannot be given this. The reel is a charming addition to the picture, and makes it unusually worth while.

Someone should keep the strong lights off of Miss Hampton. Lon Chaney, excellent actor that he is, does splendid work as an Italian who in a simple way loves the heroine. His work is very good, and in the sequence showing the escape from the police there is some excellent climbing done by either Chaney or a double. When he climbs to the elevated structure and jumps the train your crowd is sure to be thrilled. E. K. Lincoln has a rather mean role, first falling in love with the heroine and then running after another girl which leads her to leave his sister’s home and almost die from a broken heart. But in the end all is patched up.

The color work insistently demands attention. The story of the search for the Holy Grail adapted from Tennyson’s poem, is done masterly. Not only are the colors soft, without fringe, and unusually attractive, but the work of the star and Lincoln, appears to advantage. Lincoln, of course is Galahad.

Story: Hope Hampton, as a hat check girl, is struck by the motor of a rich society woman who adopts her as a companion. Her brother falls in love with Hope, trifles with her, and Hope leaves the home of the rich woman. The brother goes hunting in England, finds a cup which he thinks is the Holy Grail, which when stolen by Chaney, eventually eures Hope of her ills. How she cures the suffering with it, and finally wins her lover back, is the end.

Talk of the Colored Reel, Use Star’s Name and That of Lon Chaney
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

While you can use the name of the star to advantage, and easily promise the best picture she has ever made, you can also promise your people the finest reel of colored photography ever shown in this country. The episode of the Holy Grail should be known to many, even though they may not know Tennyson’s poem. Get some stills of the colored reel and use them all around the lobby. If they are in color so much the better. They will be excellent as an attraction. But use them in black and white if you cannot get the colored ones. Also use the stills of the star. She looks very beautiful in one.

The title hardly lends itself to catchlines, but you can talk about Faith being the Light in the Dark and perhaps work it in. Also use the name of Lon Chaney who is easily the best known in the picture and E. K. Lincoln may also be known to some of your people.
FOR the first three months of the new season, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation makes one of the most important announcements in its history—an announcement that constitutes in a practical manner the fulfilment of a picture ideal.

In presenting the features and short subjects listed on the succeeding pages, we have sought to give expression to the sense of responsibility which we have always felt toward the Exhibitor, a responsibility that begins with good product and ends only when the full service implied by a HODKINSON CONTRACT has been faithfully and expeditiously performed.

That the Hodkinson policies have met with the full recognition of the Exhibitors of the country is best evidenced by sentiments such as the following which are continually making their appearance in the Box Office Records of the trade press. They are typical of the Exhibitor-attitude toward Hodkinson product and Hodkinson service:

"Have played a great many Hodkinson Pictures, and each one has proved to be a good attraction."
R. H. Durham,
Mission Theatre,
Mt. Vernon, Wash.

"Hodkinson Pictures are the most satisfactory, clean and entertaining, and at a price, too, exhibitors, that enables you to make money."

And so we might go on for many pages. It is significant that not only have Hodkinson Pictures demonstrated their audience-values, but when the Exhibitor goes out of his way to mention the condition of prints, the square-dealing prices and the effectiveness of paper and accessories, it is proof positive that he is getting more than so many feet of film when he buys a Hodkinson Picture, that an element of service goes with the sale which makes for satisfaction.

1000% Advertising Value

"Affinities" is an ideal showman's picture. It's a rip-snorting comedy-drama tremendously rich in entertainment values.

It was written by Mary Roberts Rinehart, the author of "Affinities," whose books are known to millions.

It has Colleen Moore, one of the great shining lights of today's galaxy of popular screen stars.

It has John Bowers, that versatile young actor, who has climbed to such heights of popularity that his name has become a great power at the box-office.

"Affinities" has all those values that go to make a big money maker.

Box-Office Dynamite

Here is one that is guaranteed to get them in.

Exhibitors! Look at the DYNA-MITE TRIO you have in this production to assist you in making some easy money.

WILL ROGERS, one of the most popular characters on the stage today and the big star of the nationally-known Ziegfeld Follies, and also one of the sure-fire drawing names of our industry.

WASHINGTON IRVING, whose classics are to be found in every nook and corner of the universe.

"THE HEADLESS HORSEMAN," that mysterious, terrifying spectre of the "Legend of Sleepy Hollow" that caused one of the best-known characters of fiction, Ichabod Crane, so many uneasy moments.

Man alive! Here is a picture that will pull them in rain or shine.
Packed With Laughs

“Mind Over Motor” is one of the famous Mary Roberts Rinehart “Tish” comedies that became tremendously popular through the medium of the Saturday Evening Post. Very few writers of today have such an enthusiastic following as Mary Roberts Rinehart. Her name has become a powerful box-office factor in the moving picture business. Additional advertising value has been added to “Mind Over Motor” through the selection of Trixie Friganza, who plays the lead in this exceptionally amusing photoplay. The American public from Coast to Coast remember Trixie Friganza as one of the greatest comedienne's that ever graced the musical comedy stage.

With a good picture and two such business getting names, exhibitors are assured of more than satisfactory returns at the box office.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 4,627 feet

Incidents of a character that will undoubtedly appeal have been blended into a story, which although not entirely novel in theme, is practically certain to register favorably with most audiences. From the start,
"Top O’ The Morning” is replete with little episodes and twists that hold attention.

Get the Title Over and Boost the Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In the title you have a valuable asset, for it is an expression of greeting which you can popularize with suitable advertising and then readily link with the production. If you book this, you should concentrate on that at the start. Play up the idea of meeting folks with a cheerful, “Top o’ the morning”; get over the idea that a merry greeting in the early hours is the proper way of starting the day; use handbills and throwaways with only the title lettered on them and then follow with literature tying it all up with your show.

Gladys Walton is charming in the role of the Irish girl which suits her splendidly and the rest of the cast is up to par. The scenes with the baby girl, the insertion of shots with the pig and other bits all help in rounding out an offering that should score with those who do not crave sensationalism.

Edward Laemmle has maintained an even tempo and put the smiles and throbs in cleverly. The suspense is maintained until the end. If one insists upon probing to the depths, he will find that the story is basically old—that the situations are in no sense new.
On the other hand, this is a clean and wholesome production in which the somewhat familiar material has been given commendable treatment without the aid of glamourous sets or dramatic encounters.

Woven into the story is a bank-theft angle, but this has been toned down in a manner that is entirely in harmony with the spirit of the picture. Furthermore, the situations lead up to a climax that leaves the onlooker well satisfied. There is nothing to tax the imagination, and while some of the coincidences are rather startling, they are not too far-fetched.

Story: Irish girl who arrives in America finds that she does not fit into the household of her relatives.
She leaves and through a near accident meets a wealthy banker with whom she had come in contact in her native land. Given the task of taking care of his motherless baby, she wins his heart, but complications set in because her innocent brother is involved in the machinations of dishonest members of the bank force. She lands in jail helping her brother in an attempt to secure an important letter, but at the finish there is a general reunion with the villain apprehended and the clutch is in order.

Gladys Walton is attractive and has followers who should be reached. She does good work in this and her name should come in for its proper share in the bally-hooing. Incidentally, Anne Caldwell, the authoress, may be known to many and the fact that this is taken from a stage drama that had a New York run will attract. Get over a light spirit and get the attention of those who like stories about Irish characters.
A cute pig figures in some of the humorous bits and a press book suggestion is that one of these animals be lettered and sent through the town. Not a bad idea.

EXTERIORS ............... Sufice
INTERIORS .............. Look cheap
DETAIL ................. Average; runaway locomotive chase only fair
CHARACTER OF STORY ....... Good particularly for those houses catering to lovers of melodrama
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 5,900 feet

This is one of the famous old time mellers adapted for the screen and expected to find some of the business which for a time proved very popular recently. The chances are the producer was inspired to make this after "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" went out and cleaned up, and the question is whether or not they will want to see another of this sort of picture. It is inevitable that the comparison will be made with the other "drink" picture, and in comparison this will hardly average up. At times there are evidences of cheapness in the production, both in the home of the engineer and that of the president of the road. Railroad engineers, while not making fortunes, have comfortable homes. The one presented looked very ordinary.

In the effort to bring the production to a point of real interest they have introduced what is intended to be a real thrill by having the engineer's daughter and the president's son trying to overhaul the train which is carrying the president and which is run by the drink crazed engineer. The long shots are fairly interesting as they show the race, and there is one fairly good shot of Marguerite Clayton swinging from the swaying locomotive and over the top of the train to the cab where her drunken father is running the engine. She prevails on him to stop the train just on the edge of the bridge which has gone down, saving not only his life but that of her lover's father as well. The clutch comes almost instantly. But why Mister Hero allows the girl to climb over the swaying train is left untold. But then the hero hasn't much to do anyway. He's just a nice pretty boy.

As long as they were making this it is a pity they did not put a little more money in it. There is an atmosphere of cheapness that could have been avoided without much additional expenditure. The comical board walls of the engineer's home are made rather evident when the drunken engineer is able to smash a door panel with a large water pitcher, and the railroad president's home, with the artificial flowers was hardly up to standard.

The cast, however, does very well. Harry Morey is excellent as the drink crazed engineer and Edmund Breese satisfies as the railroad president. Brinsley Shaw overacts as the villain and Marguerite Clayton does well as the engineer's daughter. Little Miriam Battista does a great fall and otherwise is clever, as she usually is. George Fawcett has too little to do. The others are unimportant.

Use Players’ Names, But Forget Production in Exploitation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Stick to the well known names of the cast. This is your best bet. There are enough good names in this to get away with the so-called all-star cast feature without difficulty. Harry Morey will easily be recalled and George Fawcett is a box office bet in his way. Then too Edmund Breese has done some excellent work and Marguerite Clayton is well known especially to serial lovers. Little Miriam Battista's name will be well known, and lots of people like to see clever kiddies in pictures.

You can talk about the thrill of the railroad chase and show some stills. If you can get one of Marguerite going over the train it will help, especially to those who like thrills. But otherwise lay off the production. Just forget it and center your exploitation on the strong cast and the title. If your people liked "Ten Nights" then they may flock to see this. On the other hand they may say this is just like that was so you had better work this out to make sure you'll get them in. Catchlines based on the title and existing prohibition laws might well be used.
All the world loved "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "Daddy Longlegs" and exhibitors everywhere made big money when they played them.

Here is another story by the beloved author of "Rebecca" and it is as big, as human, as sweet and appealing as "Rebecca." It was scenarioized by the girl who did "The Cinderella Man" and directed by the man who made Mary Pickford's "Poor Little Peppina."

"TIMOTHY'S QUEST" is the loveliest, sweetest story that any distributor in the world has for the new season. Prints now being shipped to all our 24 exchanges. See it quick.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Woman whose soul

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 5,200 feet

From beginning to end "Dusk to Dawn" is replete with lavish settings, expense apparently having been disregarded in the making. In America and India, the spectator sees impressively staged scenes, painstaking as to detail.

Florence Vidor who plays a dual role, including a characterization of an Indian girl, performs unusually well. As the American woman, she is stately and dignified; in the other role she is active and vivacious.
In each case, she is worthy of praise.

As to the manner in which the story will be taken, that is problematical. Certainly, it is unusual. Highly imaginative, it has been directed in a manner that is fully in keeping with its character. It is likely that many people will not regard seriously the possibility of one soul belonging to two people; that very fact,
however, will interest others.

The scenes in India, the tiger hunt, the end of the Oriental girl who goes to join her slain husband at the funeral pyre and other incidents have all been transferred to the screen with extreme care. Enjoyment of the story depends on the manner in which one regards spiritualism.

Story: Marjorie Latham during her sleep lives the life of a maid in India, the basic idea being that her spiritual self is not her own. Babette, a notorious dancer, has meanwhile had entanglements with Marjorie's brother and the son of a banker. Latham has accepted responsibility for a forgery committed by Babette and in order to save the family name, Marjorie consents to cure the banker's son of his infatuation for the dancer, in return for which there is to be no prosecution. Winning the confidence of Babette, she learns of the latter's guilt and the ensuing fight causes her to be placed in jail. At this stage, she is apprised of her brother's presence in India and summons him to America where he is cleared. The death of her psychic counterpart makes it possible for her at the same time to wed the man of her choice.

Get the Idea of Spiritualism Over—Create Talk About It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

During the last few years, much publicity has been given various psychics. Spiritualism and differing ideas about souls have been discussed and prominently played up with the result that many people have been converted to believing in the beyond. The fact that the predominating idea in this is the dual-soul theme gives you an exploitation angle which can be made to pay. What you should do, is to stage an essay contest on dreams, whether or not they are to be believed and whether it is possible for more than one person to possess a single soul. Hit home along that line in teasers—use the mailing list, telephone and newspaper advertising. Get them talking about spiritualism—awake comment.

There are many who are attracted by an Oriental display and stills of shots in India should be displayed for their benefit. Should you find it desirable to go in for extensive plugging, a booth with a mystic answering questions or some such scheme would prove a magnet.
Sensational Story With Radio Twist Made for Thrill Hunters

"SAVED BY RADIO"
Russell Prod. Inc.—State Rights

DIRECTOR ......................... William Craft
AUTHOR ............................. William Craft
SCENARIO BY ... Lieut. Thomas Berrien, U. S. N.
CAMERAMEN.............. Ernest Miller and Hal Mohr
AS A WHOLE........ Should appeal to those who like sensationalism in large quantities

STORY...... A series of fights and plots built up to radio rescue DIRECTION...... Has concentrated on thrills with several sentimental touches to soften it
PHOTOGRAPHY ......................... Fair
LIGHTINGS .............................. Ordinary PLAYERS..... Jacqueline Logan attractive; others acceptable
EXTERIORS............. Good fishing village shots
INTERIORS .............................. Plain DETAIL ................................. Conventional CHARACTER OF STORY...... Battling hero uses the radio to summon flying machine and government boat to foil plotters, winning rich man's daughter

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,800 feet

Obviously made with the object of taking advantage of the current radio craze, this is quite a thriller. Its appeal is directed essentially at those who crave sensationalism. The element which follows serials and is harnessed by personal encounters, rapid rescues and malicious machinations will probably find in it enough to justify stamping of feet and whistling. At the climax when the aeroplane and government cutter speed to cut off the crew of evil-doers, with the hero perched on one of the wings, ready to do battle in noble style—when a flag is seen flapping in the wind—when the leading man finally lands among the scheming gentry and delivers sleep-inducing blows to a la Jack Dempsey, there is plenty of excitement.

As a matter of fact, it is old stuff in spite of its modern title. The radio outfit might just as well have been a wireless set of the type formerly used but somehow they seem to like material of this sort.

Technically, it is not up to a very high standard, the one prominent idea having been, apparently to jam it with action. Nevertheless, an effort should have been made to make some of the details more convincing. The mob scene with all of the people near the jail waving their arms lacks realism and there are other failings. One does not sympathize very strongly with the miserly old doctor whom the hero struggles so desperately to save, and the conversion to goodness of that individual told in a late title is sudden. But the action is there.

Story: A stingy old man has a monopoly in a fishing village. Plotters endeavor to secure a foothold in the town and the villain succeeds in winning the former's favor. The result is that the hero's chance for the hand of the doctor's daughter is weakened. When the elderly individual is taken to a cave high in the hills and held with the purpose of securing an important signature, suspicion is cast upon the leading man who is lodged in jail. He gets away, reaches the cave, figures in fights and uses a radio outfit to get help. A chase, riot, reunion, smiles and matrimony in the offing.

Popularity of the Wireless Your Big Exploitation Angle

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

With the development of the radio, it was natural that films dealing with the novelty should be offered. If you cater to an audience that wants pictures of this nature, if your patrons include dyed-in-the-wool radio fans—should they be of the thrill-chasing element, you can probably use this to advantage. If a more discriminating set of theater-goers frequent your house you had better look it over carefully.

The radio angle is not as prominent as it might be, but there is enough footage dealing with it to make possible tie-ups with wireless establishments. It should not be difficult to arrange for cooperative advertising with the stores that deal in supplies and a stunt that can be made to pay is the broadcasting through the air the fact that "Saved by Radio" is to be exhibited. Rig up your lobby with broadcasting or receiving outfits.

DETAIL...... Some excellent touches. Titles very

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Audiences of neighbor-

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............. 8,422 feet

When R. A. Walsh obtained from Hearst the picture rights to "Kindred of the Dust" those who follow picture material declared that Walsh had secured one of the greatest stories ever written for the screen. There were so many splendid touches in this unusual story of the love of a stern Scot for his only son; and how this was twisted by the love affair which the boy develops for Nan of the Sawdust Pile, a charming girl who, tho apparently unmarried, has a son; so many splendid characterizations, including the wonderful old Laird; the son who inherited all of his pride and proved himself a real man on all occasions; of the charming Nan, together with a lot of others, that it seemed destined that even a young inexperienced director could hardly fail with it. Surely Raoul Walsh, with all his long experience, and his splendid training, was expected to produce something unusually worth while.

The picture was privately shown some time ago, but reached Broadway only last week. After the original showing Walsh's friends conceded that the picture needed cutting, but certainly if it had been left in its original shape it might have been better than what is now offered. Walsh has made a new reel showing Nan and her boy sweetheart, when Nan and her father first reach the sawdust pile, evidently for the purpose of bringing out the love interest later. But in doing this he was compelled to sacrifice some of the material presented before and to bridge this he has used titles. Some of these may get by with audiences that are not critical; but certainly the regulars are going to wonder why there weren't pictures instead of titles.
Then some of the big sequences have been held so long that they become tiresome or tedious. This is especially noticeable when Nan's grandfather dies;
when Donald is supposed to be dying and again where Donald starts to leave his parents' home to visit Nan.
Too brief is the shot showing Nan reaching Donald in the hospital. Unnecessary altogether is the shot showing Nan being spurned by Donald's mother and sister after she has brought him back from the edge of the grave. Because even though a mother might not disire a woman for her daughter-in-law she would surely be too grateful to the woman who saved her son's life to treat her in such a churlish fashion.

The production is lavish, and there is a fair thrill registered at the end when Donald rescues his father.

Your Women Patrons May Like This, But Go Slow On Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have this coming you had better slide it by without too much talking. Otherwise you may disappoint. You can talk about the splendid production, and say it is a story of the northwest lumber country.
You can use catchlines telling of the splendid love story, but be careful not to make too many promises.

The Strand built up its program for this by showing Max Linder's burlesque on "The Three Musketeers" and seemed to do a fair business. Indeed some few applauded the picture and you could hear snifflies and the use of hankkerchiefs was noticeable among some women in the final episodes. So you may be able to get this by especially if you happen to have a lot of women fans as regulars. It will hardly please many men; it is too tedious. Which may account for some of the unsatisfactory reviews in the New York papers.
But it is really a woman's picture, and by making a play in this direction you may come out all right.
Some Short Reels

“Ma and Pa”—Mack Sennett—First National
Type of production..........................2 reel comedy Several amusing gags and situations are included in this offering which leads up to and culminates in a burlesque on a stage melodrama—a favorite subject for satire with the Senett forces. Thematically, there is scarcely any reason for attaching the theater farce which includes little that is new, the trick of disclosing how some of the devices work being an old one. On the other hand, there are incidents that will please, some likable youngsters and two dogs including the Great Dane, Teddy, who figure in a bath scene that will strike home to the feminine part of your audience if not all of it. That sort of material always gets over effectively and it should here as well. In the paper-hanging episode, there are several funny stunts and the portion in which Billy Bevan’s home is demolished is good slapstick. On the other hand, the idea of tossing the principals into water does not register so well.
Mildred June is pretty and Jim Finlayson secures laughs, while Bevan does his share. As a whole, it is creditable stuff of a riotous nature.

“Their First Vacation”—F. B. O.
Type of production..........................Two reel comedy
Here is a comedy with Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven which should score solidly. It has a clever theme, several unique situations and knock-about bits which are really funny, as well as commendable work by the performers. The scene in the saw mill in which first the feet and then the head of the male De Haven escapes the blade is thrillingly laughable and although he gets into various difficulties, a humorous spirit is maintained at all times. Mary Culver, Charles King, May Wallace and Tin Sanford are included in the cast while credit for the scenario goes to Beatrice Van and for the photography to Lee Garnes. There is no reason why this should not get over in good fashion.

“Unfermented Bricks”—Universal
Type of production..........................1 reel comedy
Here is another comedy that turns out in the end to be a dream. Neely Edwards plays the part of the tramp, Nervy Ned. The tramp begs for a sandwich, and the lady of the house tells him to come back in five minutes. At the next house the landlord is asked to return in five minutes for his rent. When the time is up the landlord gets the sandwich and the tramp gets the rent money. This starts the chase which ends when the cops knock out the tramp and call the patrol wagon. The rest of the story is what the tramp is supposed to dream. In his dream the tramp becomes a rent collector and is showered with Irish confetti—bricks. As he staggered out of the ton of bricks he acts as though he were drunk and causes twenty-five men to follow him. The gags are only mildly amusing, for all have been done before many times. Will make an average comedy filler and bring several laughs from the less critical type of audience.

“Such Is Life in Busy London”—Hy Mayer—Film Booking Offices of America
Type of production..........................One reel travelugh
As usual very good, and if your people like this you can run this with certainty that it will please. It surely presents London life as only a clever cartoonist or would show it.

There is the famous London Bobby, shots of well known and historical buildings and sections and the inimitable drawings which Mayer fades out into actual photos. Nearly all of them brought forth laughter at the Capitol this week. Exceedingly interesting, not only as travel features but as a comedy also.

“Official Urban Movie Chats” No. 30—Hodkinson
Type of production..........................1 reel magazine
Here is a typical number of the chats. It opens with a few words from Congressman Pess of Ohio who takes the opportunity to congratulate the “Movie Chats.” The industrial section illustrates the mining of surface coal at Wilkes-Barre.
Views of the Pan American Building in Washington are next in line. A title tells you that a good portion of the expense of this building was contributed by Andrew Carnegie. The sport section shows some very thrilling motor boat races while the travel chapter takes you to the Blue Ridge Mountains of Tennessee and introduces you to some of the natives. The magazine as a whole is varied and contains some interesting material which should please the average audience.

“Pop Tuttle’s Movie Queen”—F. B. O.—Paul Gerson Pictures Corp.
Type of production..........................Two reel comedy
Dan Mason is the proprietor of a rural picture house in this Plum Center Comedy in which there is a contest for patronage between the place of amusement and meeting of the “blue” element. The principal is given an opportunity to go through a series of antics and gags relative to the out-of-date features of his theater. His use of the sprinkler, running the slides upside down, the tearing of the celluloid and efforts to pass a waiters off as a genuine screen performer from Hollywood should amuse those who find “rube” comedy entertaining.
The titles are written in a light vein, and while much of this is slapstick stuff, there is enough of a plot to hold the bits together and it should register nicely. Mason is funny and the offering can be used to advantage after a feature in which the city is the locale. Robert Eddy directed, A. H. Giebler wrote the scenario and Roy Vaughan was at the camera.

“The Truth Jugglers”—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production..........................1 reel comedy
Paul Parrott is the chief comedian of this comedy built on the well worn mother-in-law theme. Paul plays the part of the stay-out-at-night hubby and in order to explain his delay he invents a lovely story about freight yard roughs and necks and how he was robbed, gagged and bound to the tracks with the Overland Limited dashing towards him. He was saved by an earthquake which shook the ground and threw the locomotive off the tracks. Does the mother-in-law believe the story? Not a bit of it. The finish of the film illustrated the finish of the stay-out-at-night husband. The gags are not very new but the picture is well done and will amuse almost any type of audience. It is not up to the best that Hal Roach has done recently but it is well up to the general average of the series and contains the usual number of laughs.

New Sales Heads

Paul L. Dunbar has been made sales manager of United Artists and Kenneth H. Hoaklinson, sales manager of Alfred Producers. Charles Hines, formerly sales manager of United, has resigned.

Coming Back Home

(By Cable to THE FILM DAILY)

Paris—A number of important film folk are scheduled to sail tomorrow on the Majestic from Cherbourg. They include Ben Blumenthal, Pola Negri, Emil E. Shaver, Watterson R. McIlroy and others.

As previously noted Pola Negri will make pictures for Famous Players' release immediately upon her arrival.

Ben Blumenthal is taking with him to the States a print of "Sodom and Gomorra" made by Saccha Films of Vienna. This production was 18 months in the making.

Another Road Show

Lesser to Handle "Oliver Twist"

This Way—Release Oct. 1

Hollywood—Sol Lesser will roadshow his production of "Oliver Twist," starring Jackie Coogan, with the release date set for Oct. 1st. With a Broadway run planned, Lesser announces that between March and June, the road trip will be put on tour visiting every important city in the country. Each road company will be under supervision of experience and showmanship and will include musical conductor with special score, projectionist, advance man and an electrician. The company will carry a complete line of exploitation paraphernalia. According to the Lesser plan, booking will be independent and not confined to the cinema houses but open to legitimate houses as well.

Lesser will leave shortly for New York where he will make his headquarters, until after the release of "Oliver Twist," with his brother, Irving M. Lesser.

It is understood that Lesser, who will come East with Abe Gonsevsky, will bring a print of "Oliver Twist," and also the first print of Eleanor Glyn's first production made by the Principal Picture Corp., called "The World's a Stage." Dorothy Phillips, Kenneth Harlan and Bruce MacRae are in the cast.

Muriel McCormick Not to Star

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—Muriel McCormick has refused to allow her, to star in four pictures at a fabulous salary. It is Miss McCormick's intention to center grand opera.

Tom Moore Sails

Tom Moore, assisted by Mrs. Moore, sailed today on the Mauretania, for London, where he will appear in the Tom Terriss special, "Harbor Lights" with Wyndham Standing.

American and Canadian rights for the production are in the hands of the Inter-Globe Export Corp.—Sydney Garrett.

Leave for Coast Tomorrow

Mae Murray and Robert Z. Leonard leave tomorrow for the Coast where "Coronation" will be made. Many members of the cast will go along. The Murray's expect to return immediately after making this production.

New Magazine

Is Being Prepared by Captain Bains For Educational Release—New York

A new sort of pictorial magazine, different, so they say, than anything ever done of this kind, is being prepared by Captain C. McL. Bains, for educational release. It is expected that the initial release will be made Oct. 1.

While Capt. Bains was not anxious to discuss the new magazine yesterday he finally admitted that it is expected to show something entirely new to men experienced in magazine construction for pictures were interviewed and finally the editorial management was placed in the hands of T. B. Sherrman, who has had long experience with the Hearst publishing organization.

Something like 15 cameramen are working for the magazine; the special house of $150 per month being an unusual bait for their work.

It is understood that the New York release will, at the start, be confined exclusively to members of the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce.

Barber on Way

Morris Barber, general manager of the Cinema Finance Corp., is expected in New York about Sept. 11 and will be at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel.

German Press Organizes

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Berlin—A number of film critics of the Berlin newspapers have recently organized to assure the situation of professional film critics against the film industry as well as against the censorship. Members are not allowed to write manuscripts for sale, nor to be materially interested in the industry. Dr. Erni Tannenbaum, editor of the B. F. Am Mittag is president.

Local Circuit

Expected to Have Something Like 400 Days—Booking—In Opposition

Reports are in circulation that the proposed booking circuit of members of the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce, is increasing the point where legal papers will soon be in readiness.

While the proposed organization is said to have nothing to do with the recently formed C. C. A., as a body it is anticipated that many of the members, if it is the end of the season, will sooner or later identify themselves with the new circuit. At all events, those interested claim that the circuit which up to this time is unnamed, will be able to give the distributor 400 days of booking.

The largest individual booking now being run is 100 days for the average feature by Loew, although this was extended to 159 days for "Blood and Sand." One of the men interested in this movement of which Lee Ochs is reported to be the Chairman, said yesterday, "There is every reason why we should protect ourselves for booking. As the case now stands, what between Loew, Keith and the Fox circuits, the neighborhood houses are practically shut out, that is until after the feature has played in one of these circuits and has dropped out of the road."

"Practically every exhibitor of any consequence that is running neighborhood houses has erected them since, because of the war. They represent large investments and to be compelled to follow the circuits means a hardship and at times a definite loss for them because in many instances although they have to follow the showing of a feature in the circuit houses, they are compelled to pay more to follow than the circuit does playing it in advance."

"We plan that the proposed circuit idea will check this sort of thing and also give exhibitors the opportunity of at least looking even if not making a profit."

Famous Players Stock Active

Famous Players common stock was actively traded yesterday, 21,300 shares being sold. It reached a high mark at 106½, low at 102¼ and closed at 103.

Film Stars Attend Opening

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Bridgesport—It is understood a number of important film stars attended the opening of the Palace, and the new "Phantom" house, on Monday night, through the courtesy of Marcus Loew.

... to the exhibits, there will be standing room only in Arlington when the great aquarium drama hits the town. Plainly, "Mary Miles Minter in Augusta, Me., some time ago in 'The Heart Specialist.' The show nearly went under because the female patrons loudly protested against Mary wearing French heel evening slippers while standing in a haven. Augusta should send Peter Lott. That expert in female raincoat tells us that only one does the job. Crockett, however, now wear French heel shoes, but they lost their hate. But Maine women are still strong on the Orient preserving the ancient traditions. Gloria Swanson in one of her pictures is competed by her director to the Rio Grande. When she emerged on the other side of the river she still preserved her marcel wave. The women of Portland, Ore., would not stand for this. They told the conceal exhibitor in his lobby cubbyhole that simply could not be done. But I know it can be done—and saw her do it. As a matter of fact, I saw Ruth somebody swims from the Battery to Nort on some years ago, and when she emerged her bangs were dry. But how long can the 'movies' withstand such Sainte-Beuve?"

"Columbia, Ind., has big Bill Hart to be more tender with children. The fans in Columbia, Ind., will not have anything to do with the love scenes. They are trying to can Bill because he looks like them. Smile, Bill—hurry!" "Bridgeport, Conn., sends in the news that the picture public there is going for 'Society and High Life.'"

Sam Bernard, Calif., writes in that they do not want any more pictures for his and opera class.

In Hanover, N. H., an exhibitor had his people hold on him because the picture of a baby was 'for intellectuals only, not a good education,' the picture, by the way, was not 'The Call of the Wild,' but just Peter Hobson. When culture hits Hanover we may expect the return of the dodo.

"Columbus, Ga., asks for pictures based on stories like 'Pigs is Pigs,' where 'one can come home and talk to the boys.' That is the reason they call the 'educational motion picture' in the small towns."

"Texas is losing its imagination. An exhibitor here said that his audience could not imagine a woman coming out of a brothel to kill men and then killing the villain."

"Washington, D.C., thinks a picture up a point. They don't want any more 'unintelligible' plots down there. But what is a probable plot and what an improbable one?"

In Boston, the motion picture is up against the caste system. Some of the working people out there said that a certain picture with a troup of Balkans as Turks, added by the move to say Greek plebeians on Com. people.

BAY CITY, WASH.—A "whale" of a remarkable scenes of whale hunting, and the harpoon, weighing 57 pounds, had been fired from a three-inch ship.

FOREST HILLS, N. Y.—American opening singles of Davis tennis match—Australians take the doubles. Tilden Johnson won both of his opponents in 100,000 last week attempt of the trail to win the international heat from America. The Australians, G. L. Harrison and J. C. Anderson, turn the tie and win the doubles match.

Other news as usual.

Newspaper Opinions

"Grandma's Boy"—Asso. Exhibitors

Tribune—Annually nearly always and bilaterally a good thing, "Grandma's Boy" is no exception. It carries its hero through a series of familiar adventures, but they are tricked out, as Mr. Lloyd himself has enough amusing incident to provide good entertainment.

TRIBUNE—If Fred Newmeyer is responsible for the delightful bits of business with which "Grandma's Boy" is rounded off, then it deserves to share the honors with Harold Lloyd. Truly a comedy, it is filled with surprises. Although it is difficult to believe that a five-reeler comedy could be so unpretentious, the former ingredient and the latter, Lloyd and his director have managed it somehow.

Daily News—Lloyd's first five-reeler of one year's best films. This is the kind of stick which you laugh, wrong-headed, weak, but when you come out you know why. It is a picture you'll remember.

Telegraph—When you say that "Grandma's Boy" is Harold Lloyd at his best things are much more to be said. This young actor has made a great many two-reel comedies—good ones, too, but never anything that has the full flavor of five-reeler production. It is, therefore, not only his finest work, but his most ambitious, as well.

World—The funniest screen comedy which we have seen this year. The really lusty humor lies, not in the routines but in the original and seem to have a reason for being there. The second time around, it is "Grandma's Boy." It is impossible to tell when the laughter is coming from the screen or the audience. It is, therefore, probably the more enthusiastic about Mr. Lloyd and his work.

American—Harold Lloyd's first five-reeler film so good it is too short.

Herald—Lloyd's biggest imprint on the screen. These are other very indelible moments and they seem to have placed him picture cast of the hands of the new season.

St. Louis—This first five-reeler picture by Lloyd has a plausible plot, skillfully managed, swiftness of movement, freedom from vulgar slapstick and many of those novel touches which so often in a Lloyd picture touch off the laughs with the unexpected shocks of an explosion.

Telegraph—Lloyd is the star and he is a real star, too, for he twiddles all the way through "Grandma's Boy." His past comédies have shown that he has the knack of finding and using the funny angle and turning a "magnus opus." The merry little play is filled with typical Lloyd situations, humorous, touching, satirical on human weaknesses, pathetic and optimistic.

World—Other films at other houses undoubtedly will be outstanding ones, but "Grandma's Boy" is the outstanding picture of the lot—"Grandma's Boy." It's Lloyd and Lloyd alone.

Eve. Journal—Lloyd was never before so entertaining because he never before had so entertaining a picture.

Mail—It would be difficult to conceive getting too much of Harold Lloyd when he maintains his high standard as he does in "Grandma's Boy."

Mail—One would have to go far and wide in the world to find a picture witnessing a picture of genuine comedy and who isn't more entertaining as that supplied by "Grandma's Boy."

"Slim Shoulders"—W. W. Hodkinson

Capitol—When it is a thoroughly conventional film tale in which Miss Castle paces this time, but interesting for all that.

Telegraph—The photography by George Fabry is exceptionally fine. The cast is excellent, the plot is the best the studio has turned out, and leads us further to believe that Mrs. Castle has as much right to claim the title of an actress as any great many others we see in the films each week.

Herald—All things considered, it is the best produced picture which Mrs. Castle ever had a chance to display all the changes of a Mary giovna gossamer and curl in her hair—except possibly a rescue a man: EAE, Telegraph—Miss Castle, slim and graceful, dominates the screen offerings in a way.

Eve. Journal—The settings of the production are elaborate, and the acting well done. There are a number of clever complications, and, while the situations are rather overdrawn, in spite of the fact—or more probably, because of it—the story is very entertaining.

American—Enables the kind of fashionable fiction that is avidly devoured by the public. The playground of fortune's favored few—and that's a mean one to those people is the theater.

Telegraph—"Burning Sands" has been a man's answer to Edith Hall's "The Sheik," and depicts the figure and the situation of the main role in Mabel's previous big screen production. EAE, World—The cast and may picture worth while, numbering among such names as Milton Sirotta, Louise Dresser and Robert MAIN. If you go to desert scenes and heroic love-making, by all means take a squint at "Burning Sands."

Eve. Journal—Though it bears the title "Burning Sands" that qualifying prefix does not entirely describe the activity of the desert girt.

Mail—"Burning Sands" has all the earmarks of a huge box office success, replete with the kind of things that the roving divisions of imaginative public takes to see on the screen, but, better than that, it is staged magnificently with the little heart ever may be said of the story, which has its weak moments, the settings which Mabel's person in both the men and the cattle super.

Telegraph—The story proves to be rather tedious, the conversations of the people are dull, and the players are much more dramatic than their parts. You find the picture hard to believe in.

American—"Burning Sands" was tedious, futile. If you had viewed the “scenery”—and I think I saw a pyramid in the distance—there was nothing left.

"Love Is An Awful Thing"—Selznick—Select—Criterion

Telegraph—"Love Is An Awful Thing" is getting a lot of good fun. Owen Moore stars and plays a performance that is a guaranteed cure for the blues.

World—One looking for escape from the moral and material strife of recent film offerings will find an opening at the Criterion on "Love Is An Awful Thing." Its story should set well and come diversion from bravado and jolts.

Senate Rates for Industry Agreed Upon
By Conference Committee of Tariff Bill

Standard Width Film Will Have Four-Tenths of a Cent Duty
Prints of Foreign Films One Cent a Foot—Developed Negative Three Cents—Other Rates

(Blow Long Distance Telephone from Washington)
The Conference Committee on the proposed tariff bill have agreed with reference to the rates affecting the motion picture industry. The rates proposed by the Senate have been agreed to and will become a part of the new tariff bill.

Under this the rate on foreign raw stock, as well as finished negatives, will remain practically as they are today.

The rates are as follows:

<table> <thead>
<tr>

All rates based on percentage are ad valorem and as provided by the Senate are to be based upon the valuation of the commodity.
The House bill provided for assessment based on American valuation.
When the House passed the various items they were materially different from those which the Senate agreed upon. It was expected that there would be some difficulty in determining the varying rates out, but there was little experience with any of the items, except with the proposed duty on standard width raw stock. The House conferences desired to have this raised from 4/10ths of a cent, as desired by the Senate, to 5/10ths, but the original Senate rate finally prevailed.

Working on "Ben Hur"
June Mathis to Do Continuity—
Will Collaborate on Production

A. L. Erlanger announces that June Mathis has been engaged to write the continuity for "Ben Hur," collaborate on the production and edit the film, which is to be produced by Goldwyn.

The players will be sent to Pale-stone and to Italy in order to shoot the scenes described in "Ben Hur." Other scenes will be photographed at the studios in Culver City.

Miss Mathis will start work immediately on the continuity and will accompany the players on their foreign expedition.

No director has been selected for the task up to the moment, but it would not be surprising if this was arranged by F. J. Godsil, who is now in California. None of the leading players have been determined upon.
Cuts and Flashes

Harry T. Morey has been cast for "The Passion Vine," being directed in Florida by Rex Ingram. Morey recently completed work in "The Riptide," produced by Ottawa, Canada, by Ernest Shipman.

E. H. Griffith has returned from Nova Scotia, where he directed "The Sea Riders" for the Canadian Marine Pictures, Ltd. His cast included Edward Phillips, Charles Eldridge, Betty Bouton, Edward Lawrence, and America Chedister. Freeman Owen was the cameraman.

Mabel Bardin has opened a casting office in conjunction with Maxine Alton at 1422 Broadway.

Ernest Haller will photograph "Outcast" with Elsie Ferguson. He was cameraman on "The Shepherd King.

Steamer Sailing

Sailings of steamers for foreign ports, with time of sailings, destinations and points for which they carry mail are as follows:
How We Will Set the Value of “East is West”

SETTING EXHIBITION VALUE

The unusual production cost in which, of course, the screen rights to the play are an important item, make it necessary that unusual precautions be taken in order that the rentals on the picture be determined by actual box office test runs before any definite exhibition value is placed on the production. Accordingly Mr. Schenck and ourselves have agreed upon the following plan:

Play dates for preliminary test runs in six theatres are now arranged. Upon the result of these engagements a temporary or tentative exhibition value will be set, at which rate 40 additional test engagements will be played.

Upon the results of the 46 engagements the final exhibition value for all rentals will be set.

We believe this plan will be fair to exhibitors while at the same time giving the producer what he is justly entitled to.

REGARDING SPECIAL NATIONAL ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

We have agreed with the producer that the public must be told of the unusual entertainment value of “EAST IS WEST,” so they will understand that this latest picture of Constance Talmadge’s is a real special, and far bigger and finer than anything in which she has yet appeared.

A national magazine advertising campaign running over a six weeks’ period has been decided upon. In order to tie up this campaign directly with theatres, each exhibitor running the picture will be given free certain special advertising for local uses. An unusually big and fine line of standard accessories will be provided in addition.

REGARDING RELEASE DATE

The general release date has been set for Oct. 23rd. The test engagements will precede this general release date. Exhibitors will be kept informed as to what the picture does at test runs by advertisements in the trade papers.

Too Conservative

Says Marcus Loew of English Exhibitors Advertising Methods—Newer Pictures for England

In his first interview issued since his return from London Marcus Loew said yesterday: "The one fault I have to find to English exhibitors are that they are too conservative in their advertising methods. Such advertising as they do we would not consider advertising here at all. They have their programs a year ahead and they proceed just along set lines. "This block system of booking I think to be faulty, as the new product does not reach the English screens until it too has become old and of less value. "Metro hopes to relieve this situation, providing the proper co-operation is forthcoming from the exhibitors in retiring some of the old product and supplanting it with new material. This will not only bring the foreign market up to date, but determine proper values for the new product.

"Presenting super-features in legitimate theaters or in a method as we know it as 'road show' is somewhat new to English exhibitors and proved quite satisfactory with our presentation of 'The Four Horsemen' at the Palace.

"Dough" Wants Injunction

Douglas Fairbanks has applied to the Supreme Court for an injunction against the Leader Film Corp., Majestic Motion Picture Co., Triangle Film and Hyman Winik. Fairbanks asks that the Triangle corporation be restrained from re-editing or reconstructing any pictures manufactured by the Majestic Company under a contract made in October, 1918, and in which pictures Fairbanks was the star.

Squirrels in Pictures

The Canadian's Exhibitor Exchange have for release, six one-reel Squirrel Comedies. Over 300 squirrels are shown in these comedies which were taken at the home of Dr. Lilian D. Powers, White-Plains, N. J., the owner of the animals.

Unusual Stunt

Warner's Float All Ready for Cross

Country Jaunt to Coast—Idea

Looks Good

Something which resembled the top of a library table; so big that it compelled attention, rolled up yesterday

in front of the office of THE FILM

DAILY. It was the float designed by Eddie Bonnes of Warner Bros.

The float is 13 feet high, and the total length of the seven books is 17 feet.

The books are in striking colors, and the names of the seven pictures are emblazoned on both sides of the truck.

This float will make a tour of the country, beginning in New York and ending in California. On the tour will be a publicity man, who will visit

Mayo and Governor along the route, carrying with him a letter of introduction from Will H. Hays and Mayor Hylan of New York.

An unusual number of publicity stunts are expected to be put over and it is conservatively estimated that about 25 million people will see the float display of the Warner pictures.

In this respect it will exceed the circulation of the largest and best known national magazine published in America.

The seven productions to be advertised by the float include, "Rags to Riches," and "Heroes of the Street,

both with Wesley Barry, "The Beautiful and Damned," by F. Scott Fitz-

geral, "Main Street," by Sinclair

Lewis, "Brass," by Charles K. Norris,

"A Dangerous Adventure," with

Grace Darmond, and "Little Church

Around the Corner," by Marion Russell.

The truck will be equipped with a radio amplifier, and reports of current news events and concerts will be given at street corners in the various cities visited. Also, a portable pro-

Pol’s Plaza Reopens
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Worcester, Mass. — The Plaza, operated by S. J. Poli, reopened last Monday, Labor Day, with a change in policy making the theater a picture house. Extensive alterations were made during the closed season.
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother cry kibitor put his show over.
Send along your ideas. Let you know how you cleaned up.

Tied Up With Dance Hall

Worcester, Mass.—Because he continued his dance hall as well, Manager Daniels of the Olympia arranged a special
"Sonny" dance for his hall at the same time he presented an entertainment in his theater. The combination proved a hit and made the title of the picture a byword in Worcester. You don’t have to control the dance hall to do this. If the locality and patronage make it advisable a tie-up could be effectuated with some hall in the neighborhood.

Orange Growers Cooperated

Los Angeles—As the result of arrangements made at the West Coast a national tie-up has been made for Dorothy Phillips, star of "Hurricane’s Call" with the Orange Exchange.

As the first evidence of this arrangement the Kinema was given unusual disclosures for the season.
The Sunkist Orange Growers Association backed the picture during its run as they are behind the movement to do anything that will stimulate the sale and growth of oranges. Four windows were tied up in this respect.

Music Haltered Passers-by

St. Petersburg, Fla.—Manager H. G.
Griffin of the Phiel "said it with music" in his lobby for "The Da-tator." One of those Southern darkies who plays the guitar as well as he does African dominoes, was concealed behind a lattice over the box-office.
He perched there all day and emptied his soul of Spanish music. He made quite a hit, until the harmony halting nearly every passer-by. Most of them stopped to locate the source, and by the time they perceived his kinds of hooper, they were too hot to pass and stills. The lobby was decorated with bright bunting and vari-colored streamers of crepe paper, hung rests from the ceiling. By the year Griffin’s expenditure was $56 and he states business was increased by much more.

A Miniature Dirigible

Bristol, Va.—As the outstanding feature of a "Molly O" campaign at the Isis, the manager fixed up a lobby display of two animated attractions.
One was a miniature dirigible eight feet long suspended over the marquee. A battery in the cabin kept the propeller in motion while a strip of leather between the blades produced the realistic whirring sound.
Red lights were placed in the cabin and the windows reflected the light.
This display cost $3; the printing
$2 and $1 was spent for sundries.
The gasbag consisted of an old sign cloth, and was printed and garbage pail and automobile received a thorough ransacking in the great scramble that ensued. For four hours the mobs surged through thoroughfares of the city, blocking traffic and finally necessitating the issuing of police orders against future congestions in the streets.

When the battle was over, $250 worth of goods had been brought forth, from their hiding places and exchanged for their cash equivalent.
Just as the last coat, hat and drawers were distributed among the people to the looking for the money.

Following the stunt large advertisements were used to tell New Yorkers about the successful finders and the rewards that resulted from their labor.

UNDER TWO FLAGS
FROM THE IMMORTAL NOVEL BY OUIDA

DIRECTED BY TOD BROWNING

UNIVERSAL - JEWEL
James R. Quirk, editor of Photoplay, lays a charge of dynamite against the roots of the motion picture industry.

He says "a stone wall of ignorance" among distributors and producers in New York is responsible for the bad pictures, the uninteresting pictures; the pictures the American public does not want to see.

He says the council tables in New York are surrounded by a lot of dead-wood personalities and that the old leaders of the industry are unfit to produce better grades of pictures because they haven't got the brains in their heads with which to do it.

That's straight talk from a fighting Irishman and American Releasing Corporation, speaking for itself alone, challenges and resents Mr. Quirk's charge.

Speaking to and at the directors and producers of America across a distance of miles, we say that—

American Releasing Corporation:

1. Has the intelligence to select and shape the photoplay materials that will appeal to the intelligence and liking of the American people.

2. Can tell producers and directors what the public wants and will pay for willingly.

3. Can steer a producer or director safely away from the kinds of pictures that should not be made and can eliminate the players that the public refuses to pay admissions to see

4. AND—can offer all this expert advice and a successful channel of distribution to any director or producer who is unhappy or crippled by the conventions of his present environment.

Having appealed successfully and intelligently for twenty odd years to the better and best tastes of millions of the American people we'll be damned if we will accept as true the direct charge that this particular unit of the motion picture industry lacks the intelligence to direct its directors and producers in the selection of the proper materials for those millions of Americans who are seeking from motion pictures what Jimmie Quirk says they are not getting.

Here you are, boys, all wrapped up in dollar bills and silver dimes. It's a cleanup if you get it, and a sour face if the other fellow lands it. Get this one and push over the start of your season with a real kick. They'll probably want a lot for it, but—it looks like real business and the S. R. O. sign to work.

Harold Lloyd has been developing rapidly during the past few years until it was necessary to put him in features to give a better run for the money. "The Sailor Made Man" was his first longer than two reels and cleaned up. But "Grandma's Boy" looks like better entertainment value from a lot of angles. Incidentally it gives Lloyd his first chance to put over some straight stuff and while you know he is a comedian and playing to register a laugh later, still his straight work is effective.

There are so many good gags worked in, so many sure fire laughs, that it is hard to pick the best. But there was a tremendous roar at the Strand when, wearing his grandfather's clothes, of the vintage of 1861, he calls on Mildred. First his grandmother had told him the peddler had said that he hadn't sold another suit like it; and the colored servant wears the same thing. Then the mothballs give Mildred a noseful and he finally gets the balls out of the inside pocket and puts them in the box of candy, only to cause a greater laugh when he as well as the bully who is also courting Mildred, mistake them for candy and start eating them.

Then, when the pet kitten comes in and smelling the goosegrease on his boots starts to lick them—well, this brought a real gale of laughter; to be increased when the kitten after being kicked away returns with three other cats to have a goosegrease party. The way they annoy Harold— but see it, or better still, let your crowd see it.

The manner in which Grandma inspires Harold to lose his cowardice through a magic piece of carved ivory—in reality the handle of her umbrella, how he captures the tough tramp, and overcomes the bully, winning Mildred at the end, make up the story. But, as noted before the story is but a thread on which Lloyd and his associates hang their gags. The sequence showing Lloyd capturing the tramp is full of laughs; his fight with the bully a roar, and the last shot, showing him falling in the pond, while carrying Mildred, when he mistakes the back of a pig for a rock, is the very touch needed to send your folks home in the very best of humor. The man or woman who won't laugh at this Lloyd comedy just hasn't been born. As for the kids—they will love it.

There isn't much for anyone else to do but Harold—and by the way there is a clever touch in having him called Harold and his leading lady called Mildred. It makes them seem very natural. Anna Townsend is the delightful, charming old lady who is Harold's grandmother, and she is very natural indeed. The others haven't much to do. But Harold stages a good fight with Charles Stevenson, the bully.

This is the Sweetie Peach—See to it That You Get It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is the sweetie peach of the minute. If this doesn't spell a lot of business then you can't tell 'em in advance. This looks like the best piece of money Lloyd ever got for you—and you know what has has done for you—or the opposition.

Best not worry too much over the cost. Better figure to get it because they are going to talk about this for a long time and this means prestige to the house playing it. You'll have to get back of it to clean up—and it deserves all you can figure, because if you don't jam them in every performance and have them standing in line it will be your own fault.

There isn't much you need do except plug this one. If your crowd likes Lloyd tell them it is the best thing he has ever done, and say that almost every New York newspaper said so—if that means anything to your people. Tell them of the 16 weeks run in Los Angeles and the long run it has had wherever it has played. Get something attractive in the lobby, and if you go in for prologues, write Joe Plunkett at the Strand, New York, get his orchestration, and score and use it. Stick to Lloyd's name and forget everything else.
Sheiks and Desert Atmosphere In Latest Melford Production

"BURNING SANDS"
Geo. Melford Prod.—Paramount
DIRECTOR ... George Melford
AUTHOR .................. Arthur Weigall
SCENARIO BY ...... Olga Printzlau and Waldemar Young
CAMERAMAN ............... Bert Glennon
AS A WHOLE......Rather interesting desert story with some good dramatic sequences and fairly forceful climax STORY......More "Sheik" atmosphere; slightly illogical but offers entertainment of type that appeals to many DIRECTION......Very good; has staged picture with a tendency toward the spectacular and has gotten in much effective detail
PHOTOGRAPHY ......................... Good
LIGHTINGS ......................All right PLAYERS.........A carefully selected and capable cast with Milton Sills and Wanda Hawley in principal roles; Jacqueline Logan, Robert Cain, and others
EXTERIORS .................Good desert shots
INTERIORS ...............Appropriate
DETAIL .................Given good attention
CHARACTER OF STORY......Philosopher, living among Arabs, is rewarded for his good deeds dead at death of Sheik whose unfaithful son is foiled in his effort to secure the honor for himself
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .........6,919 feet
Although "Burning Sands" differs considerably from many of the other recent Sheik stories, in substance and as far as atmosphere goes, it is similar to those that have preceded it—the familiar love theme running through and the conflict of the desert tribes.
All of which is to say that Arthur Weigall's work is another desert story and as such will either appeal or not, according to whether or not they happen to like or dislike this kind of story.

It is a typical George Melford production, rather spectacularly handled and with the director's customary careful attention to detail and a bid for a punch in the climax. He works up a good suspense toward the close and, in fact, all of the more dramatic moments carry a force that make them register definitely. The night attack of the Arabs has been staged with care and photographs realistically. The atmosphere of the desert is conclusive and it is obvious that expense was not spared to make it so.
The story contains good screen material and it has been well adapted by Olga Printzlau and Waldemar Young. It may strike some as being fairly illogical at times. The plotting of the hostile tribes is done so openly that it is just a trifle too convenient for the dancer to overhear their plans and warn the hero.
The dancer's ride from Cairo to the desert is another improbable bit since she could hardly have arrived in safety and rescue her lover with the place surrounded by the enemy. However, it is action the public wants, so it will likely overlook improbabilities.
The cast is very good. Milton Sills plays the philosopher whose life is saved by the dancer, Jacqueline Logan. Wanda Hawley is the daughter of a British Commissioner, Winter Hall, and Robert Cain is the villain. The cast, on the whole, does very satisfactory work.

Story: Daniel Lane, a philosopher and confidant of the old Sheik, is made leader of the tribe upon the Sheik's death, his son having played him false. The son enlists the aid of Barthampton, an English officer, to get Lane out of the way. Lizette, a dancer once befriended by Lane, overhears the plot and warns Lane. Meantime Lane has been followed to his desert camp by Muriel Blair, an English girl, who loves Lane and seeks his forgiveness for having spurned him.
The renegade Arabs attack and Lane is held captive,
but later freed by the troops sent by Muriel's father.
Lizette is killed while trying to escape.

Will Go Over Very Well Wherever They Like Sheik Stories

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

With "Burning Sands" a lot depends upon whether or not your folks like pictures with desert atmosphere.
If they have shown a liking in the past for similar subjects they will undoubtedly be well satisfied with George Melford's offering. It is an interesting picture of its kind and well produced but it is for you to decide what it can do for you at your own particular box office.

Exploitation will be easy and besides the name of the producer, you have several well known names in the cast to help interest them. Catchlines will do to give an idea of the story or a trailer might be a better means of acquainting them with it.

DETAIL Well handled—titles very funny
CHARACTER OF STORY Don’t bother about it

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION 3,842 feet

While this is somewhat short to be used as a feature, still it is going to prove unusually good entertainment to lots of people. It is particularly worth using where you have a weak feature and need bolstering of your program. On the other hand it will make a whale of a feature especially if you can build an all around comedy bill to go with it. It’s the sort of thing that could be well advertised to work in with a “Laughter Week” or something of that kind. And it will not disappoint.

Almost everybody knows the famous Dumas story, and especially since “Doug” made a feature of it last season. The entire burlesque is based on the same episode that “Doug” used, of the scheming Richelieu and how D’Artagnan came to the rescue of the Queen by securing the jewels she had given Buckingham in time for her to wear them at the big ball. Around this Linder has based his burlesque, and he has hardly overlooked a point. There is a lot of furions sword play but all of it burlesque and most of it extremely funny. There is a lot of fancy riding but almost every sequence shows something at which your audience will laugh. All the way through there is one episode after another crowded with laughs, and many of them are sure fire. The famous scene where, after all his difficulties, D’Artagnan returns to the castle with the ferrets in time for the Queen to wear them, is shown with an attractive background of soldiers and guards he has to fight, and there is one good set showing the dance and a lot of extras. Indeed the entire production is well mounted.

Linder is in the picture almost from beginning to end. Rarely is he out of the camera, but this helps materially, for there isn’t a lot to it excepting when, as “Dart-in-Again” he is on the job. Bull Montana, in a good make up, is “Duke of Rich-Lou” and is properly embarrassed when his plans are upset. All of the characters have burlesque titles, such as Walrus, Octopus and Porpoise, who are the three musketeers; Bunkum is intended for Buckingham, and very often the title writer refers to the Queen in a jocular manner that is far from what dignity requires she should be termed. But at that it is all the funnier for the treatment.

If you know the story, or remember the Fairbanks picture, just imagine that it is thoroughly burlesqued, and you need have no fear about it.

Tell Them It Is Unusual, a Burlesque, and a Scream
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

When this was presented on Broadway the Strand used it in addition to “Kindred of the Dust” and it seemed to be liked a lot better than this other feature. This may have been due, of course, to the fact that being on the same bill the lighter feature proved more to Broadway’s liking. But it is certain to please any audience.

There are few burlesques that reach the screen and because of this it would seem you could apply a lot of unusual stunt advertising and publicity to the feature. Other than it it is a burlesque on a famous story and picture that is well known there isn’t a lot to talk about, although Max Linder’s name may be remembered because of some of his earlier comedies. But unless they went over big in your territory don’t stress his name too much.

Be careful to make plain that this is an American made comedy, up to the minute, and well produced, for Linder’s name may give the impression that it was made abroad; and this might prove detrimental. Other than Linder there is hardly any name in the cast sufficiently known to capitalize except that of Bull Montana, and you can say Bull is really very funny as the Duke.

EXTERIORS ............................. Few
INTERIORS .............................. Appropriate
DETAIL ................................. Suffices

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Farce comedy with plenty of laughs

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........6,500 feet

Selznick started something when it presented Owen Moore in “Reported Missing.” The latter was such a good entertainment that they realized there should be more like it, so the next effort is “Love Is An Awful Thing,” another good comedy and wholesome entertainment, but not up to the pace set by “Reported Missing.” The story isn’t as strong as Moore’s previous vehicle and while there are situations that offer opportunities for first rate comedy, they are not big enough to carry the feature to the footage given and be continuously funny.

They get into the comedy business right off with Moore gaining the consent of a grumpy father to marry his daughter after having vowed to a spotless past. The first big laugh comes when Moore, to convince “papa” that a phone call is from his buddy, Harold Wright, puts his father-in-law-to-be on the phone and Harold, thinking Moore is on the other end, tells him that a certain Marion is coming to town and will be ready to marry him. The only way Owen can get out of it is by swearing “Marion” refers to Ohio.

All of the comedy comes from the complications which pile on through Owen’s attempt to marry Helen without letting her know he has a “past” at all. Heerman gets plenty of laughs out of the situations, but he makes the mistake of using one idea too long and occasionally spoiling the effect of the first laugh by repeating the same stunt. Hero’s attempt to evade the man with the summons is too long drawn out, with too many shots of Moore and his buddy chasing up and down hallways and in and out of rooms. The episode of the letters is another that might have been curtailed to the betterment of the film.

Moore is splendid in the role of the willing-to-be-husband. It is different from the part he had in “Reported Missing,” but once more he’s a successful comedian. Marjorie Daw is Helen and others are Arthur Hoyt, Douglas Carter, Charlotte Mineau, Nitz Edwards, Alice Howell and Kathryn Perry.

Story: Tony Churchill wishes to marry Helen Griggs and in order to get rid of an old sweetheart, Marion, who appears at the wrong time with her old love letters from Tony, he hires the apartment house superintendent’s wife to play the part of his Tony’s wife, so that Marion will not expect him to marry, h.s.t. Complications pile on with Helen also thinking her fiancé is married. Matters eventually work out to the satisfaction of everyone with the ceremony making Tony and Helen one.

Amusing, But Not Quite Up to Moore’s Last

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You know by now what “Reported Missing” did for you—or for the other fellow—and that is all you need to know to make your decision on “Love Is An Awful Thing.” It is a good, wholesome comedy entertainment that will satisfy any crowd if they want light, cheerful pictures. You can promise them they’ll be amused.

If they saw “Reported Missing” you can get them in on its reputation and by promising another laugh-getter in Owen Moore’s latest. The title is a good one and catchy. Play it up prominently and in conjunction with the star’s name, of course. Use plenty of stills and any stunt advertising that you think will get them. Post the title alone for a teaser and follow it up with information that will give them the rest and the date you show it.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Ranger and girl

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 5,000 feet

One must take into consideration when viewing this western that it is intended primarily for patrons of the smaller houses. That will explain the total lack of modern production values, for this was not intended for high-class trade and should not be judged from such standards. There is a type of picture-goer who is satisfied when a set of encounters and bits of gun-play are offered without very much of a story or elaborate mounting. Where that attitude prevails, this will be accepted on the strength of its fast-moving action.

Allowing for the fact that "The Range Patrol" was not filmed for the more discriminating fans, one still finds much that is at fault. There is a general spirit about the offering that is not modern; rather it is all very much like the stuff they turned out long ago.
There is no real illusion and the performers are just men who jump at given signals, shoot according to specifications and do everything else with little true histrionic display.

The action does move with rapidity and one incident follows rapidly after the other. Probably, those who enjoy material of this sort will be pleased by the speed.
At the same time, this is distinctly jerky and had an effort been made to include more acting with a consequent toning down of the riding and fighting, it would have probably reacted more favorably in the direction of the producer's wallet.

There are weaknesses in this which cannot be overlooked and as far as genuine dramatic value is concerned, that is not often present.

Story: A gang of rustlers work in harmony with a banker who has a mortgage on the heroine's land.
The leader of the gang wants to marry the girl who naturally spurns him and the ranger appears for the customary fight. Gold having been discovered on the land, the thieves use the mortgage in an effort to deprive the girl of her property. There are several one-against-the-crowd duels with ultimate victory for the leading man and woman and punishment awaiting the banker.

Let Them Know What It Is About Without Big Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Several difficulties may present themselves in the exploitation of this. To begin with, you may have few names of importance to draw them in, nor is there any unusual angle presented in the picture. What will probably be the wisest course, will be to figure up the receipts of offerings of this kind in the past and give this a play in keeping with the success of those films.

A stunt that should appeal to those who will not see this as satisfactory entertainment will be something in keeping with its character. In that connection, a street parade of westerners or a few men in cowboy attire stationed in your lobby will draw notice.

Regardless of what you do, be sure to let them know what is is all about. Don't make any promises about dramatic qualities, don't make claims about anything unusual in the way of a western. Simply tell them that it has action and moves at a good rate of speed.
Don't ballyhoo it too boldly, however.
Human Interest Play Should Prove Satisfactory Entertainment

"THE WOMAN HE LOVED"
American Releasing Corp.

DIRECTOR ..................... Edward Sloman
AUTHOR ........................William V. Mong
SCENARIO BY .................. William V. Mong
CAMERAMAN .............................. Tony Gaudio
AS A WHOLE......Mixture of humor, pathos and Jewish characterizations which should satisfy STORY......Primarily a vehicle for Mong; includes enough sure-fire material to get over DIRECTION......Sustains interest in commendable style and handles performers well
PHOTOGRAPHY .......................... Very good LIGHTINGS ............................ Creditable PLAYERS........William V. Mong gives interesting performance; Marcia Manon, Lucile Ward, Fred Malatesta and others up to the mark EXTERIORS ......................... Good city shots
INTERIORS .............................. Adequate
DETAIL ............................. Satisfactory
CHARACTER OF STORY......Jewish family from Russia comes to America where mother leaves her husband. Complications lead to a happy reunion
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5,200 feet

Throughout "The Woman He Loved," William V. Mong occupies the center of the screen, the story serving primarily as a vehicle for the character actor. His performance in the role of the Hebrew peddler is a most interesting one: his demeanor, constantly jovial, will win favor. The rest of the cast, which is quite up to the standard desired, helps considerably and as a whole this is quite acceptable.

Technically, the production is satisfactory, the staging of interiors and selection of outdoor locales having been done in a manner that provides an atmosphere of realism. The city shots and portions showing life in New York's ghetto are deserving of praise, the interiors look like the real thing.

As far as the theme is concerned, one will find nothing especially noteworthy, but it is satisfactory stuff with the happy and pathetic moments so distributed as to maintain interest. Several incidents in which Bruce Guerin, a youngster is seen, and a few bits of footage showing other kiddies, have been cleverly interspersed and as children on the screen usually appeal this is enhanced.

It is essentially a human interest drama, and while audiences everywhere may not be especially interested in Jewish life, there is no reason why it should not be accepted on the strength of its general spirit and a number of meritorious situations. It is not a big picture but a pleasing one.

Story: Nathan and Esther Levinsky come to America where the latter leaves her peddler husband because of poverty and runs off with Levy, who is apprehended as a forger and she is stranded. The result is that she gives her youngster into the custody of others. Her husband's affairs, meanwhile, prosper and in the West he comes across his son recognizable by a peculiar mark. The latter's romance with a young woman whose father is antagonistic to the Jewish race makes it unwise for the father to disclose the relationship. Another attempted villainy on the part of Levy later on, when the peddler has lost his possessions in a fire, leads to a complete reunion of the family and a happy ending.

Will Register Especially With Jewish Clientele

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In houses frequented by a Jewish clientele, this should prove very welcome entertainment, and if your theater comes under that classification, you should find this easy enough to exploit in a manner that will get them in. Tell you patrons just what it is about—use the mailing list freely.

In the production there is a problem presented by the love of Levinsky's son for the daughter of a rancher whose attitude to Hebrews is unfriendly and that twist in the theme should provide you with the basis for starting a controversy on the matter. Teasers, catch-lines and heralds judiciously worded will do the trick there.

William V. Mong who wrote the story and plays the leading role is known to many. He should be mentioned in the advertising, as should be mentioned his son. Stills showing the kiddies and Mong as the evil peddler should be displayed in the lobby, for these should attract.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Adventures of a drifter who saves a ranchman's daughter and his property, eventually winning the daughter

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .............. 4,783 feet

"The Galloping Kid" is another thoroughly pleasing bit of entertainment from Universal's pleasing portrayer of western roles, Hoot Gibson. The picture has a tone of general satisfaction and holds an appeal for the big majority of picture audiences and offers the sort of story that suits both the star and the public.

This is Nat Ross' first picture with Hoot Gibson and he has done exceptionally well in every respect. He handles the story, the star and cast in good judgment and provides an acceptable production, good photography and something just a bit new in the way of locations. The caves of the cliff dwellers haven't found their way into many films but they do play an important part in Hoot Gibson's latest, with Hoot doing some fancy escaping when left there by the villain to die. Ross has also included some interesting western locations that will appeal to the regular audience.

William Hamby's story is an interesting one and the director has developed it carefully with good attention to detail, a proper distribution of action and some effective comedy touches that relieve the melodramatic business. It isn't an unusual story but contains the kind of situations that permit of a good audience appeal and give the director opportunities to appeal to the spectator through the action they afford, some comedy bits and then because they fit the star.

Gibson does good work and competes with some of his cowboy competitors with a fairly unusual stunt, that of hopping on to a flat car and crawling beneath the buggies while the train is in motion. He has a pleasing personality and works to satisfy his audience.

Story: "Simplex" Cox, a happy-go-lucky drifter, gets the job of chaperon to a ranchman's daughter, Helen Arnett, because her father wishes to keep her away from Bolston, a man with "shady" dealings. Bolston persuades Larabee, Arnett's foreman, to force Cox into the cliff dwellers caves owned by Arnett, and abandon him. Cox escapes and learns that Bolston had been mining platinum on Arnett's property. He rounds up Bolston's gang and captures Bolston, returns to Arnett and tells his story. Arnett saves the property which was about to go for the mortgage and wins Helen.

Safe Bet and An Audience Picture You Can Count On Pleasing

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors catering to the average motion picture audience, the kind that is satisfied with a good wholesome entertainment and a pleasing star, will do well to book Hoot Gibson's latest offering, and for that matter, all of the recent Gibson pictures. They have all been very worth while and offered interesting pastime.

Exploit the star's name and promise them another good one in "The Galloping Kid." Use catchlines to give them an idea of his latest adventures and tell them how he took a job for $10 which included a chance of being killed as part of the bargain. Edna Murphy is the star's leading lady again. She also appeared in the last Gibson feature, "The Loaded Door." Play up the star's name and if he has a following in your neighborhood, promise them they'll surely like his latest.
but — the biggest and best sixteen pictures of the year
OR the year 1922-23 the Selznick Pictures Corporation will produce only SUPER SPECIAL PHOTOPLAYS.

The Star Series, or Program Plan, has been abandoned.

SIXTEEN SUPER SPECIAL PHOTOPLAYS are already definitely planned and in production. It is the aim of Lewis J. Selznick to make these sixteen photoplays the biggest and most important group of pictures of the year.

In their decision to divert from the Program Plan to a policy of SUPER SPECIALS only, the Selznicks are but following the dictates of a demand that is both unmistakable and insistent. No man championed the Star Series system with more vigor than did Lewis J. Selznick at that time when the Star Series enjoyed its early vogue; no man was quicker to realize the present necessity of its abandonment.

Because they represent the definite result of a Selznick production plan which has been many years in the making, Selznick’s SIXTEEN SUPER SPECIALS will unquestionably fit present-day exhibitors’ needs better than any other group of attractions being offered in the industry.

To this end the Selznick company has been carefully building and perfecting a producing organization capable of excelling in any task, no matter what its magnitude, which may be laid out for it.

For years the Selznick company has kept a vigilant watch over the literary field in its determination to secure the best stories for photoplay production which have been flashed across the market.

Quietly the Selznick company has been outlining scenarios which insure now the has come—

novel screen treatment—no matter what the screen situation, and has been experimenting with new technical ideas involving the most advanced methods of lighting and scenic investiture.

With acute care and discrimination the Selznick company has been entering into contracts with screen notables ideally suited for the various parts they are being called upon to play in these SIXTEEN SELZNICK SPECIALS. Every Selznick Picture produced during the season 1922-23 will have in its cast stars of the first magnitude, chosen without restrictions from the motion picture industry at large.

All these careful preparations which have been in the making, not for months but for the past three years, will enable Lewis J. Selznick, first in the industry to advocate screen plays of a real Broadway character, to continue his leadership in the industry by making not only "big" pictures, but the kind of "big" pictures which will insure the exhibitor record business at his box-office.

In this booklet the Selznicks tell you of the first eight of this group of SIXTEEN SUPER SPECIALS. In view of the tremendously big scale upon which each of these features will be produced, it would be well nigh impossible to announce with accuracy the details of a year's entire output. Announcements covering the remaining eight pictures will follow in due time. Selznick Pictures will continue to be distributed by its releasing organization, Select Pictures Corporation. Following its announced policy, Select will also distribute such other high-class product as may be arranged for with the better Independent Producers.

Rather Tense Pathos In Story Based On Decline of Motherhood

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM"

Fox

DIRECTOR .................. J. Searle Dawley
AUTHOR ..................... Mr. X
SCENARIO BY ................ Paul H. Sloane
CAMERAMAN .................. Bert Dawley
AS A WHOLE.................. Highly sentimental subject that will best suit those who favor pathos to the nth degree

STORY........Has a moral that is kept before you throughout the entire picture—that woman's highest ideal should be motherhood

DIRECTION........At times very good but occasionally strives too strenuously for sympathy and stresses sentimental bits

PHOTOGRAPHY ................ Very good

LIGHTINGS ................... Also good

PLAYERS........Peggy Shaw appealing and expressive as the heroine; others do good work but in roles considerably subordinate to Miss Shaw's

EXTERIORS .................... Pretty

INTERIORS........Fair for the most part; one or two very poor ones

DETAIL................Ample, sometimes overdone

CHARACTER OF STORY........Effort to show that children bring happiness to the home

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 8,361 feet

The title and the style in which the Fox organization is billing, "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," is all any one should need to get a pretty definite idea of what it is all about. And in all probability they'll guess right the first time. The title, plus the caption "The Rivals," over which appears the face of a baby alongside of another of a bulldog, tells the whole story, a story with a message that is kept constantly before you. It is "adopt an orphan."

"Mr. X" has really included two themes in his "romance of modern American life," both of them parently sincere and truthful expositions of present day living. The one, the interference of parents with regard to the marriage choice of their children, is not a new situation on the screen but possibly still an existing condition and worthy of a place in a picture that proposes to get over a moral. The other is a more popular condition of the present day—that of women who prefer the things of society rather than the joys of motherhood. The two themes have been nicely woven together and the continuity, for the most part, quite smooth and easy to follow.

Director Dawley has used his material to advantage and as far as production values are concerned, the offering is well up to standard. There are times, however, when the director has not shown good judgment in the way he has handled situations. There is too obvious an attempt to register pathetic bits and he never misses a single chance to force more sympathy from the spectator. A few of the scenes are too prolonged, such as that in which a mother dies leaving her two children, orphans. The pantoimme between the two children is the feature's most far-fetched sequence. Babes of their age would neither act nor talk the way they are supposed to here.

Peggy Shaw handles the role of heroine capably and seems thoroughly sincere in her interpretation. At times she photographs beautifully but occasionally poor lighting greatly spoils her appearance. Roger Lytton is convincing as the stern parent and others who do good work are Florence Billings, Robert Agnew and Niles Welch.

Story: Betty Lewis marries Bob Hale secretly when her father objects to the match. Bob is killed and when Betty's baby is born, the father tells her it died. Later Betty marries Ken Tyler, keeping her past a secret at her father's request. How Betty finds her babe in an orphanage and is denounced by her husband is followed by his forgiveness when he is told that he too was an orphan.

A Good One For Certain Audiences But Be Sure You Cater to That Kind

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here's another one where you will have to consider your own particular clientele in deciding whether or not you book the picture. "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" is the familiarly termed "sob stuff," that is a story that brings chokes and tears and contains a general atmosphere of sadness with just a bit of humor here and there. It is a matter of personal likes and dislikes with a feature of this kind.

With a certain class it is likely to draw and on the other hand it may not go at all. It's up to you to find out what type of entertainment they prefer and supply whatever fills your house the best. There are plenty of exploitation angles in connection with the story and it should be an easy matter to secure the cooperation of local charitable organizations to help interest your people. Take advantage of the title and give it good prominence.
A Fair Entertainment That May Please Enough To Get By

"LIFE'S GREATEST QUESTION"
C. B. C.—State Rights

DIRECTOR ............................................. Harry Revier
AUTHOR .............................................. Harry Revier
SCENARIO BY ........................................ Harry Revier
CAMERAMAN ........................................ Not credited

AS A WHOLE. . . . . Ordinary entertainment in feature that combines Mounted Police slogan with another familiar situation

STORY. . . . . May satisfy if they aren't critical but rises to no dramatic heights

DIRECTION. . . . Average on the whole; surprise twist near close is the best effort put forth

PHOTOGRAPHY ................................. Fair
LIGHTINGS ........................................ Poor

PLAYERS.................. Louise Lovely, featured in role which she handles capably; Roy Stewart always a good Mounted; others Harry Von Meter, Dorothy Valegra and Eugene Burr

EXTERIORS ................................. Suitable
INTERIORS ................................. All right

DETAIL ................................. Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY. . . . Jealous suitor kills woman when she marries another and mounted officer is held until deathbed confession clears him

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.............. 5,000 feet

Harry Revier's story is a combination of the "should a wife tell" and "get your man" themes, worked together in satisfying fashion and offering a feature that will please those who are not too critical and won't complain because of the lack of originality in story. There is an appropriate atmosphere of the North and for those who like action there are a few physical combats that should be enough to satisfy them.

The director tells his story in a straightforward fashion, keeps things logical enough and handles the players carefully with the exception that he allows Van Meter to overact and wear clothes that hardly go with the locale, for instance a swallow tail coat. Louise Lovely has a more dramatic role than usual for her but she proves quite capable of handling one of this kind. Roy Stewart has been seen before as an officer of the Mounted Police and once more he fulfills the requirements of such a part adequately.

"Life's Greatest Question" deals with a woman who married without telling her husband of her past and is later bound by the man she left. Combined with this is the romance of the Mounted officer and the daughter of the woman's husband. The "get your man" angle comes in when the woman he killed by her former lover and suspicion is cast on the Mounted and his arrest demanded by the jealous husband. Despite the complications here, Revier manages to keep things comprehensive and there is a first rate suspense in connection with the woman's death. First the identity of the person who has been murdered is concealed while the spectator is allowed to form his own conclusion. Then when it is disclosed that it is the woman, there is a further suspense as to who killed her.

Story: John Carver learns that the woman, Nan, who had formerly been his, is married to Julio Cumberland, a prosperous citizen in a little Northern village. Carver is sought by Dick Osborne, of the Mounted Police, the sweetheart of Nan's new stepdaughter, Dorothy Cumberland. Dorothy, who knows Nan's story, warns her and she appeals to Dick to protect her. Meantime Cumberland becomes jealous of Dick and quarrels with him. At the same time Nan is attacked by Carver and killed. To cast suspicion upon Dick, Carver places a button from Dick's uniform in the dead girl's hand. How Dick is held but later freed through Carver's deathbed confession completes the story.

Consider Those You Cater To and Then Decide

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This one will do for theaters catering to a crowd that isn't critical. It won't satisfy where they expect and demand the best pictures because "Life's Greatest Question" does not reach that standard either in story or production. It is just an average feature that will please an average crowd.

If you know they favor Northwest Mounted stories, play up that angle of it and you might use the names of Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely who are fairly well known to the "fans." Or if you think the idea of the wife keeping her past a secret from her husband would have a stronger drawing power, go at it from that direction. The title can be played up with interrogative catchlines and an invitation to come to your theater and find the answer.

Character of Story......Girl of tenements is adopted by rich man for experiment; years later she marries the judge that wanted to send her to a reformatory

Length of Production ............. 5,000 feet

Ever so often there has to be a modern Cinderella story. The latest is Vitagraph's production, "Little Wildcat," starring Alice Calhoun. The most prominent and outstanding feature of this latest Vitagraph release is the marked improvement in the acting of the star. Whether it is that she has a more suitable story and better opportunities, or the fact that David Devar can get more out of her, is a matter of conjecture, but the result is decidedly satisfactory and gratifying. Miss Calhoun does probably the best work of her career so far and her interpretation of the "tough kid" is likely to gain many new admirers for her.

The story itself isn't anything unusual nor original. Besides the Cinderella theme, there is a war romance included, with coincidence playing a prominent part in bringing the two sequences together. However, this will not spoil the feature's entertainment value for those who demand a happy ending for the hero and heroine. It is pleasantry told and will appeal to a good majority.

There are a few instances wherein Devar might have been a trifle more explicit and at the same time not been accused of using unnecessary detail. This is in connection with the girl's regeneration and her sudden appearance as a nurse in the war. Her position in the midst of the enemy is not made sufficiently clear except that you are told she is aiding the escape of American soldiers captured by the Germans. The subtitles are occasionally poorly written, or at least, not in good taste.

The photography is very good and lightings also. The star is always photographed to advantage. She is given a satisfactory supporting cast with Ramsey Wallace as the hero and Herbert Fortier, the good Samaritan.

Story: Robert Ware contends that there is good in every woman if it is but given a chance to come out so he wagers an experiment with his friend, Judge Arnold, who allows Ware to pick his choice from the court. Mag o' the Alley is selected and Ware begins his task. Four years later finds Mag, now Margaret, a nurse in the World War. Arnold, now a Major, is wounded and nursed back to health by Margaret, whose identity he does not know. He falls in love with her but is sent away. After the war he is shocked but happy to find her at Ware's home.

Exploit the Star—Her Work In This Deserves It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can safely show this one and feel sure they will like it. The typical "fan" audience will be especially pleased with it and you can count on "Little Wildcat" drawing more admirers for Alice Calhoun. It should be worth your while exploiting her name and promising them a really interesting performance in this one. She hasn't had much chance to create an impression beforehand but she has a good chance in this one to start a following for herself.

Tell them it is the story of a girl of the slums who was taken into the home of a millionaire on the wager that he could make a lady out of her. Use stills that show the star in the contrasting parts which she plays, first as the girl of the slums, then as the nurse and finally as the society girl. For your women patrons, mention the fashion show that is a part of the picture.

Not As Good a Story As They've Been Getting For Shirley Mason

Shirley Mason in
"YOUTH MUST HAVE LOVE"
Fox
DIRECTOR ......................... Joseph Franz
AUTHOR .......................... Dorothy Yost SCENARIO BY ..................... Dorothy Yost
CAMERAMAN ..................... George Schneiderman
AS A WHOLE ........................ Not as good as the stories they usually get for the star; characters rather uninteresting except for star

STORY .............................. Unoriginal and quite improbable for the most part; given satisfying production DIRECTION ........................ Average; suffices for the material at hand but couldn't do much better with it
PHOTOGRAPHY .................... Good
LIGHTINGS .......................... All right
STAR ................................. Pleasing as usual but handicapped by poor story SUPPORT ............................. Adequate; Wallace McDonald, lead; others Landis Stevens and Wilson Hummel
EXTERIORS ........................... Good
INTERIORS ............................ Suitable
DETAIL ................................. Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY ............ Cowardly father exposes hiding place of daughter's lover to protect himself but eventually discloses the guilty one

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,368 feet

Shirley Mason has not nearly as good a story in her latest release, "YOUTH MUST HAVE LOVE," as in her last few pictures. Dorothy Yost has used a threadbare plot and one that the director couldn't do very much with to make it a good entertainment. But for those who like the star it will probably suffice. For those who want to see a good picture with a strong and original plot, it won't do.

It is the old story of a man who was too much of a coward to tell the truth and save an innocent fellow from being convicted of a crime he did not commit. And the reason it is so tedious is because the spectator knows from the start, that the man will eventually clear the hero in order to save his daughter's happiness. It is just a matter of waiting for the climax, one that fails to carry a bit of suspense since it is so obvious what it will be. There is just one thing that Miss Yost neglected in following the familiar formula. She doesn't kill her villain but saves his life to be dealt with as the sheriff sees fit.

The star is pleasing as usual, though a trifle less winsome than in most of her films. She will please her admirers well enough and there are plenty of pretty close-ups for those who like her. Wallace McDonald handles the lead capably but never for a minute acts as though he had any fear of being held for the other man's crime. Landis Stevens is a convincing enough villain while Cecil Vanauker is cast for the role of the miserable coward.

Director Franz has done the best he could with the material and the production is quite satisfactory. There are some good locations and one sequence gives Shirley a chance to show what she can do as a swimmer. Photography is also good.

Story: Marvin and his friend, Hibbard, go to the latter's uncle to ask for a loan. They overhear Earl Stannard quarrel with old Hibbard and when Stannard leaves the room, the younger Hibbard enters to help himself to his uncle's money. In a fight the uncle is shot. Hibbard hides and when Stannard returns accuses him of the crime. Because Hibbard threatens to implicate him if he squeals, Marvin keeps quiet while Stannard is held for the crime. Marvin's daughter, Della, falls in love with Stannard and plans to help him escape. How Marvin eventually tells the truth and saves his daughter's happiness completes it.

Will Satisfy Star's Admirers But Don't Count On It Otherwise

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here's one that Shirley Mason admirers will be satisfied with but unless you know she has a good following in your neighborhood you had better consider it a little more carefully. Those who like her will accept it but those who seek a good entertainment from the standpoint of the story, regardless of the star, will undoubtedly be disappointed.

If you can sell it to them on the strength of the star, and know she's well enough patronized to do it, go right ahead and boost her name and count on it to get them in. The title will probably appeal to your women folks and they'll like the romance angle of the story. Catchlines will give an idea of the story if you think they should know what it is about.

"Speed"—Pathe

Type of production..................15 episode serial

In their efforts to secure novel situations for episode endings, serial producers have left little unused. Heroes of chapter plays have been placed in death-defying positions of all varieties and one would not expect anything very much of the ordinary any longer. The producers of this, however, have developed a genuine thriller. From the beginning in which Charles Hutchison, the star, figures in a locomotive rescue until the end of the third episode, they have crowded the production with action, and the result is a genuine up-and-at ’em offering for those who hunt excitement.

Dramatically, this presents little, but it was obviously made for another purpose. Everything has been subordinated to the idea of crowding it with action and if fully lives up to its title, "Speed." Hutchison rambles about the constantly shifting scene of activities, dodging detectives, foiling pursuers, getting into trouble and out again, dealing out blows and performing various stunts. At the end of the first episode, he is in danger of falling into a chimney and suffocating in the smoke; at the wind-up of the second chapter, he fights a shark and in the third he is attempting to rescue his lady love from a car that falls off a broken bridge into the water. He swims, climbs and rides, pausing occasionally to display affection for the heroine.

Lucy Fox in the feminine lead is energetic, while Very Harper holds down the role of wicked woman in good fashion. John Webb Dillon is the male villain and Harry Semels plays his character without his usual mustache. It is an able cast and production values are good. Hutchison wrote the story, while George B. Seitz directed.

As in most serials, there is much that baffles credulity, but those who follow them do not pay much attention to that part of it. The press agents promise a thrill a minute. There may not be as many as that, but there certainly are a great number of them. If your crowd wants action, this is their meat.

Official Urban Movie Chats No. 32—Hodkinson

Type of production..................1 reel magazine

From a shot of Senator Sutherland who praises films at the start, to the finish where several Sealyham terriers are shown hunting a badger, varying subjects are dealt with in this magazine which is quite acceptable. There is some scenic material taken in Florida, an industrial portion showing the making of celluloid buttons and novelties, some footage in which beach-combers ply their trade, a bit of a travel study in Tuscany and finally the section in which the dogs are seen. It is satisfactory entertainment of its type—not very much out of the ordinary but good enough to hold its own.

Pathe Review No. 173

Type of production..................1 reel magazine

This number opens with some splendid photographic shots of a bear hunt in the snow-covered Rockies. Next, "The Alchemy of Sunlight" shows the actual growth of a plant, recording in "speed" pictures fifty hours growth in as many seconds. The comedy element is furnished by a series of shadow silhouettes made by means of the hands. The cathedral of Milan, Italy is then visited in all its splendor while the colored travel pictures of the ocean grottos at Mortag, Brittany called "The Palaces of the Sea God" close the review.

"The Two Explorers"—Aesop's Fables—Pathe

Type of production..................1 reel animated cartoon

Tom Cat and Jerry Mouse set out in a balloon to discover the North Pole. Caught in a storm, they are driven to earth by lightning. The anchor of their balloon catches in the top of an Eskimo igloo and lifts it off like the top of a beehive. The Eskimos scatter to the four winds and Tom and Jerry are left in possession. They are having some exciting adventures with a flock of walruses when suddenly a giant Eskimo returns and chases them with a spear. Tom Cat yells "Each man for himself" and jumps in the balloon leaving Jerry Mouse in the clutches of the Eskimo. Tom returns home triumphantly waving a barber pole when all of a sudden Jerry Mouse sails up on an iceberg from the middle of which he leads a group of Kangaroos. The moral of which is, "Trouble and Adversity are the true tests of Greatness." The animation is smooth and the picture amusing.

"Adventures of Roving Thomas"—Urban Popular Classics—Vitagraph

Type of production..................1 reel novelty

Scenes of New York City, most of them familiar, are offered in a novel manner in this reel, the unusual element being injected in the form of an animated-cartoon cat which parades about. The titles are the comments of the cat, a unique kind of an animal which cuts capers of an amusing sort. From Columbia University, the educated feline stroll at Central Park, visits one of the more crowded sections of the town, climbs a steel structure and performs other stunts. The drawings of the Urban cat have been transferred to the celluloid in creditable fashion and what would under other circumstances be "just a set of city shots" becomes an entertaining novelty.

"Come and Get Me"—Pathe

Type of production..................2 reel western

Leo Maloney is in love with the ranch owner's daughter who teaches school, but so is the "straw boss" of the ranch. However this doesn't mean anything to the girl until he forces her to kiss him. Maloney interferes and the men fight. The ranch owner comes out and orders them all to get their pay. The girl tries to explain and finally she convinces her father but when he walks into the room where the men are, the "straw boss" and two of his friends accuse Maloney of stealing money from the owner's desk. The owner tells Leo they are going to arrest him, but he, saying, "Come and get me," locks the door on them. General acceptance of this invitation gives Maloney an opportunity to ride and fight his way through the reel. There is plenty of action and it should make an average western for audiences who enjoy this type of film.

It Pays To Know What's Going On
THIS man married to get hold of his wife's money. First he eliminated his rival by a framed up robbery. Then he systematically lied, cheated and deceived the innocent girl behind the respectability of marriage. Eventually the wife found him out. To save his own reputation he attempted to prove her infidelity. She is saved by an unexpected and highly dramatic occurrence.

It is a gorgeous vision of ravishing gowns and lavish settings.

It has an exploitation title. It will open big and hold up for a run.

An early Fall release, now booking.

John Emerson Ater Touring Europe, Changes His Mind—No Invasion Feared

John Emerson, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has strong convictions relative to foreign pictures, and their effect on the industry. In a recent statement to the press, he has indicated that American producers are making pictures abroad. In view of this, realizing his investigations abroad were interesting, he was asked to present his views to the public. They are most interesting, inasmuch as he frankly admits he has changed his mind, and says that at present the industry as very little to fear from foreign competition.

Below will be found Emerson's impressions:

Heavy Influx of Foreign Pictures

Two years ago there began a term influx of cheaply made German motion pictures into America, and at a time it looked as if they were being destroyed. As these pictures could be bought for a song and sold in the American market in competition with the much more costly American product. Our producers became alarmed at the outlook and cut down production almost to a third below normal, thus throwing thousands of artists, writers and artisans out of work. This naturally occasioned considerable alarm among those who depend upon the motion pictures for a livelihood.

Another disturbing fact was that several American producers, wishing to take advantage of the lower cost of production in Europe started a movement which threatened to result in the transportation of our industry to the various European countries.

One of the chief objects of my recent five months tour of Europe was to study this question firsthand and to gather data which might be of some little use in determining our future policy. After a fairly exhaustive study of conditions in the various producing centers of Europe, I have come to the conclusion that for the present at least and probably for some time to come, the motion picture industry of America has very little to fear from foreign competition.

As I have been one of the most strenuous advocates of protection for the American industry, it seems only fair that I should take advantage of your kind invitation to express my present views on the matter in the light of my experiences abroad, where my observation has confirmed me that European producers have such a vague and imperfect knowledge of the psychology of American audiences that, except in rare cases (which might be classed as accidents), they

Messy Business

Private Detective Agencies May Be Needed to Watch Some Managers and Salesmen

Heads of several of the larger distributing organizations are upset over the actions of certain managers and salesmen throughout the country.

While no definite charges are made and while there is reluctance on the part of these executives to discuss the matter, it is understood that defalcations have been reported running up into five figures. In consequence there is some talk of employing private detective agencies or other means, to make an effort to definitely break up what is termed "crooked work."

An executive of a very important organization said on Saturday something to this effect. "That is all there is to it."

Recent developments indicate that there seems to be a working plan by which the manager and the salesmen, working together, put through contracts at a rate below what the exhibitor should pay, making a deal with the exhibitor, and pocketing the difference between what he pays, and what he should have paid, thus fleecing the company. This idea has been possible during the summer, when business fell way off, and when the usual prices for various houses and territories were not held strictly by the office executives.

Getting Set

Uniform Contract Likely to be Settled in Hays Office Before Month

In all likelihood, sometime before Oct. 1, or shortly thereafter (unless some unforeseen hitch develops), the uniform contract is likely to be settled by the Hays organization. It is understood the attorneys are still wrestling with the points, and that the office of former Attorney General Wickersham was called in to work out the details of the proposed settlement.

This is expected to be one of the real features of the contract. Among the incidental points which have been taken up, and practically settled, although as yet not definitely agreed upon, are those relating to replacement of film, which, it is said, may be fixed at four cents per foot, allowing 14 days maximum for the approval of contracts.

impossible at the present time to get an American exhibitor to show a foreign picture, which proves that they must have had a lot of sorry experiences with them during the past year or so.

"The American producers who went over to Europe with the idea of making cheap pictures for the American market, have apparently realized the impossibility of doing business as they have all given up the struggle and come home. One or two American producers still have studios in Europe but they are making pictures for the European market with the vague hope that they may, by some lucky chance, occasionally strike one that will sell in America."

May Sleep Soundly

"So altogether I am pretty well convinced that those of us who are engaged in the making of pictures here may sleep soundly nights without any great fear of unfair cheap European competition, at least for some time to come."

"I do think, however, that something should be done to compel Germany to remove what new amounts in practically an embargo on American pictures. Of course with the market at two or three thousand dollars for the German market does not mean a great deal to the American producer, but as a matter of principle, and with an eye to the future, it seems to me that Germany should be compelled to open her market to American pictures if the American market is to remain open to German pictures."

"LEAD KINDLY LIGHT"

Is the name of the hymn. To be sung. Gentlemen. By all arising.

Whyfore? Because Nita Naldi. And Florence Dixon. With Victor Fleming. The director. Refused. Point blank. And emphatically. To touch a drop of wine. When aboard the French liner Savoie. Where they were to "shoot" a scene. "We never touch liquor" they were quoted. In the Evening Telegram. "but as neither of us. Go on. Boys. Whoed intoxicants—"

Liquor! Wine! Never touched it!

Golly: are these picture people? Boy; page Old Doc Crafts. Spread the tidings. Sound the tocsin.

MASSACHUSETTS

And what's in sight. For the referendum. Well; there's been a lot of talk. There always is. And the smart bowlers. Say it looks. As if the referendum has. Whether. Will result in censorship. Which will indicate a defeat. For the Hays organization.

Now Hays isn't talking. Nor are his people. But—and this goes—instead of bowling. And yapping. If those young men. Will just plug. And go to work. Maybe they can save Massachusetts. In October. There'll be glory enough. For all. If the referendum shows. They don't want censors.

HOW IT HAPPENS

CROSSING SWORDS

Jimmy Quirk. And Fred Warren. Of American Releasing. Who were. And says so. In paid space. Jimmy's attack. On the producers. (And Warren includes distributors.) Jimmy says water can't rise. Above its own level. And blames the producers and the swivel chair army. And Warren takes the other side of that.

TALKING OUT OF TURN

About "Grandma's Boy." Which is some picture. And Arthur Kane was smart. And coopered the hit. And pulled a mite. Telling the world. How it fell off my seat. All of which was clever. But hereafter—well. Ever hear the words of that popular melodie. "I've learned my lesson."

TRAVELLERS

If any side swinging striking engineer. Hits a train. Mid West. During the next day or so. Well. boys. You'll have a flock of new editors. To write for you. What you read. For We Us & Co. Including the talkative Mr. Johnson. Mister Ride-Em-Horseback Quigley; Mister Curley Welch; the youngest boy editor ever; Larry Boynton. And lastly me. Are all out that way. Seeing as to how Harry Charnas. Tells the ex-bi-tor. In that section. How to do things. And being compelled to listen. To Al Lichtman. Saying what a good picture. "Rich Men's Wives" is. But it's all in the day's work. The some call it pleasure.
